Enclosing Westhampton

Hamptons Synagogue Petitions the Village to Allow it to put up a "Wall"

By Dan Rattiner

In ancient times, before the appearance of Christianity, the Jews living in the Middle East, often at the mercy of oppressors, made it a hard and fast rule to designate one day a week when they would worship the Lord and do no work.

They wrote in the Torah, the book of laws, how these rules were to be observed, and rabbis interpreted them for thousands of years in another book called the Talmud. And since that day, from sundown Friday night to sundown Saturday night for Orthodox Jews these rules are in effect, just as later on Sunday became the day of observance and rest for the Christian faith.

The rabbis were very busy people, interpreting what was in the Torah to their various congregants. Much of the time they disagreed from one congregation to another. But overall, the rule of no work on the Sabbath still stands. And it is soon to be interpreted in a very public way in Westhampton Beach that I thought you might like to know about.

Rabbi Marc Schneier of the Hampton Synagogue in that town has proposed to the Village Board that something called an eruv be erected to encircle that Village. It will consist of small sticks nailed about two thirds the way up certain telephone poles, with thick strings connecting the sticks across avenues and up and down certain streets. It will form a symbolic wall surrounding the Village, which will allow certain activities inside the wall to take place on that day of rest where up to now, by the orthodox interpretation of some of the congregants, it cannot.

"We have as many as a thousand worshippers coming to our services in the summertime," the rabbi said. "Many of them are young families. In some cases, mothers cannot push their baby carriages to get to the synagogue, because the Torah tells them they cannot unless they build an eruv."

Mayor Conrad Teller, who is not Jewish, is looking into the matter, and, in fact, is doing a whole study on it so he understands it. The Village will consider the request further at a work session on April 16. If it is approved, it will be the first eruv in the Hamptons.

According to a Supreme Court decision involving a case in Teaneck, New Jersey, eruvs are legal, within reason. Those opposed to eruvs filed a lawsuit claiming an eruv was a violation of the separation of church and state, but the justices ruled that a town could prevent the construction of an eruv only if there is a very good reason. No town has yet come up with one.

They are up there, visible just as telephone wires are. Imagine that. A community that WANTS telephone poles.

Today, there are hundreds of eruvs in communities around America — Teaneck, Brooklyn Heights, Manhattan's Upper East and West Sides (it crosses the park), Phoenix, Memphis, Atlanta, Boston, Los Angeles, Providence, Dallas, Chicago and even Washington, DC, where an eruv encloses an area of that city that includes the White House.

Make no mistake, an eruv is a long, continuous string strung from telephone pole to telephone pole, or where there is no telephone pole, just a specially built pole to enclose a place. They are up there, visible just as telephone wires are. But that's it. Currently, Richard Haefeli, the Synagogue's attorney, is negotiating with LIPA to put the eruv lines up on their poles. Imagine that. A community that WANTS telephone poles, while the residents of Water Mill fight to have new telephone lines put underground.

Here is what Mayor Teller and several others are finding as they study Jewish law.

On the Jewish Sabbath, the Torah says that you may not sweep the floor, operate a car or even be a passenger in one, or turn on an electric light anywhere inside or outside your home. You can't even carry things.

But the rabbis, after interpreting the wording, found exceptions to what you can do inside your home. You can pick up things and move them around in your home, for example. You can carry food. You can put dishes away. And you can help with children. When you think about it, there HAD to be exceptions for things that needed to be done inside your home on the Sabbath.

Rabbis also studied and interpreted what would be okay and not okay at the demarcation line separating home and the outside world. They came up with three principles. Moving an object from an enclosed area (such as a private home, public building or fenced-in area) to a major thoroughfare would be illegal. Moving an object from a major thoroughfare to an enclosed area would be illegal. And moving an object more than four cubits (that's about six feet) within a major thoroughfare inside the eruv would be illegal.

Of course, then they had to define the word "thoroughfare." And what is a "major thoroughfare." The debates went long into the night.

And then, when they got done with that, they began to consider the definition of "home" or "closed in area." Solutions emerged. It was agreed that if you lived in a walled city, you could consider that the wall created a "home," provided some other residents of the city broke bread with you. Then, inside those walls, you could lift and carry certain things that up until then you could not. The key was the wall. So the "carry" rule was extended to the edge of the city walls.

There were many nuances to this interpretation. In some congregations, a small berm might be considered a wall. Or perhaps just a row of trees might be considered a wall. Eventually, it was agreed that if you could surround a small place with a symbolic wall consisting of an overhead string running around it, that would do. The string, the eruv in Hebrew, could cross over busy thoroughfares high up on the poles, creating a gateway experience, exactly mimicking the experience of a doorway into a private home or an open arch leading into a city. I think you get the idea.

Here on Long Island, there are eruvs surrounding a whole number of villages, all at the western end of the Island. Two of these eruvs near the city, one in Lawrence and one in Far Rockaway, were found to share one "wall." After some wrangling about the details, the rabbis arranged to "open" that one wall, so the eruvs could be contiguous. It gave people more space in which to carry things.

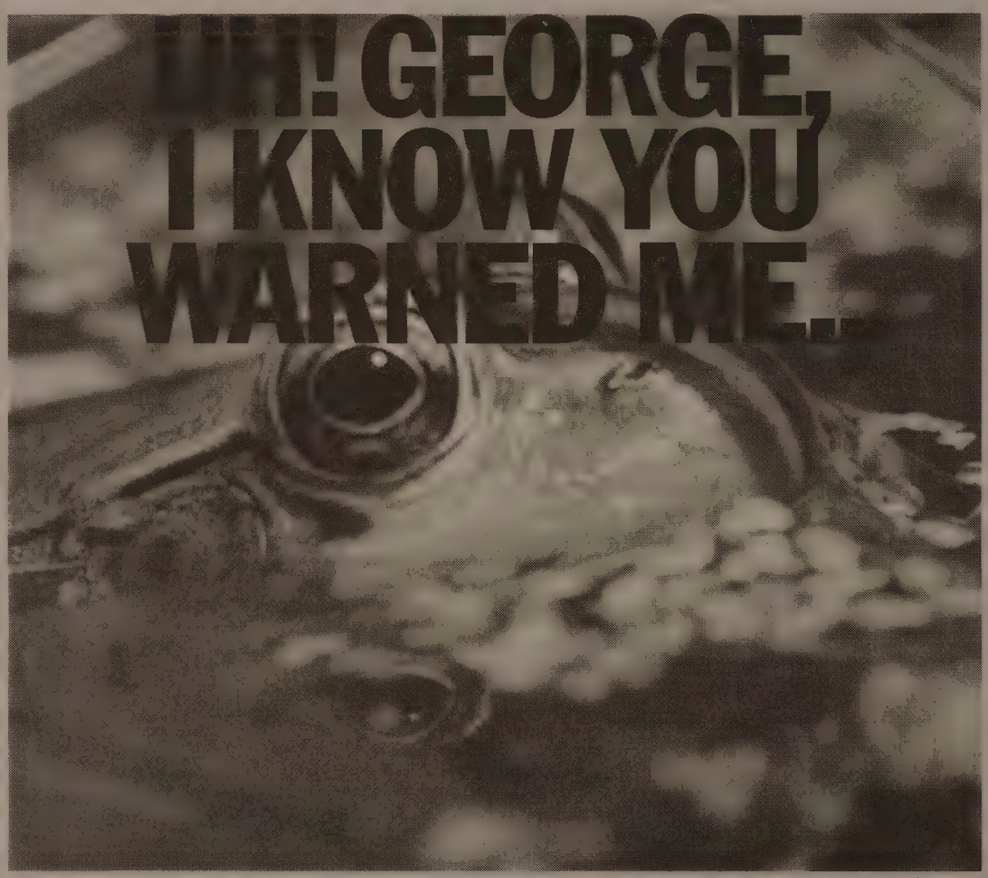
In sum, the Jews are putting up strings. And it remains fascinating what you can or cannot do inside or outside the string, as far as schlepping goes. Particularly at the string itself.

For example, a Jewish person might help carry one end of a heavy piano a certain distance within the confines of the wall on the Sabbath. But as soon as he gets to the overhead string, that's it. That marks the farthest reaches of his "home." As for a woman with a child in a stroller, she could push the stroller, but when she reached the string, she'd have to take her child out and have a less observant person, sometimes a non-Jew, carry him or her, leaving the stroller behind.

There are also interesting things that will be done at the eruv. Once a week it has to be inspected by a rabbi to make sure that it remains in order. If there is a break, the word spreads that the eruv is broken, and the rules change for the Jewish community until it is fixed.

Rabbi Schneier himself has to observe another rule. He has to serve bread to a variety of the citizenry of Westhampton Beach once a year just inside the string. The bread, often matzoh, shows that inside this wall, it is "home" for all. When non-Jews or less orthodox Jews eat the bread, it shows that they acknowledge this "home" for Jews and for everybody else. Thus God sees that it is so.

I hope Mayor Teller, if the village goes along with this, likes matzoh. •



...but the other guy said he'd give me their special promotional price and a free seafood dinner for two.

How could you go wrong?

And I would also save a few bucks.

You know how it is.

How was I to know that the free dinner would be in that hole in the ground that was supposed to be my pool.

On its own salad.

I don't know what to do. The other guy is gone. His phone is disconnected.

Now my wife isn't talking to me.

My next door neighbor looks at me and says "Grribbit, grribbit. I'm going to call the town about your frog farm".

George, please help me out.

A little far fetched?

Maybe. Maybe not.

We've been designing, building and maintaining award winning pools and spas here for over 35 years.

Quite a few pool and spa companies have come and gone in that time.

No free seafood dinners. Just fair prices and a sparkling clear pool.

Police Action

To Keep Montauk's Parade a Family Affair, They Smashed Some Booze

By Dan Rattiner

If you went to either the dump or any of the railroad station platforms on eastern Long Island the day after the St. Patrick's Day Parade in Montauk, you would have noticed something very strange. These places smelled of alcohol.

The reason for this is simple. This was the result of a police action taken to keep this year's parade from becoming like last year's parade, when an unacceptable number of the 20,000 spectators got drunk and behaved in a rowdy manner.

It wouldn't happen again. Weeks before the parade, the chiefs of the police departments in Montauk, East Hampton, Southampton and all the way down the line met to develop a plan to keep it a family affair.

The parade kicked off at 12:30 p.m. with the first of nearly a hundred very colorful, spectacular and musical floats stepping out and leading the line of them from the Montauk Railroad Station toward town two miles away. It would be over by 3 p.m. with the last of the big floats, the Coneheads, passing by the reviewing stand on Main Street and then drifting off in the general direction of Napeague.

The police assumed correctly that people coming from up-Island to enjoy this parade — and Montauk was glad to have them since it gave a real economic shot in the arm during the off-season — would leave home earlier in the morning. They'd either drive out, or go to the railroad station and board one of the special trains heading out there, all after 8 a.m.

There was not much the police could do about those driving out, except have a huge police presence at the parade itself, which they did.

But for the train, the police could be "invited" by the railroad to come out to the platforms and enforce the rule that says there are to be no open liquor containers allowed either on the platforms or carried onto the passenger cars.

And so, between 9 a.m. and noon, the police

NOTES ON SECEDING FROM THE STATE & COUNTY

By Dan Rattiner

For the last two weeks calls for secession have been in the news here on Long Island. First it was about the five eastern towns getting together to break off from Suffolk and form a new County, because in the county legislature, the eastern five towns have two votes, while the western six towns have 17. Not fair. We've threatened often.

Indeed, over the years on three occasions the eastern towns have filed papers to press this case. The new county would be called Peconic County. Carved away, Peconic County would prosper. The rest of Suffolk County would falter and that's because the West End wouldn't have the East End to kick around anymore. And the much smaller West End would no longer be the recipient of the huge financial bundle they've been getting because of the imbalance in the legislature, which was created by "One Man One Vote."

Though all of these tries failed — the last one because of just one man, Assemblyman Sheldon Silver — many still think that Peconic County will come to pass. We've got a set of plans for it. We've even designed a flag, which you may have seen flying here and there — a blue background with five gold stars. We're ready.

But now there is a second group of people that wants to secede. And it's not just against Suffolk County. This is a group that wants to make Long Island the 51st state. Suffolk County Comptroller Joe Sawicki says that Long Island is in the same position as it relates to the whole United States that the East End is in relating to Suffolk County. And he's calling for a meeting of all Long Island leaders to see what can be done about it.

I might note that four times since the United States was founded, groups tried to carve a new state out of an older one. An attempt to divide

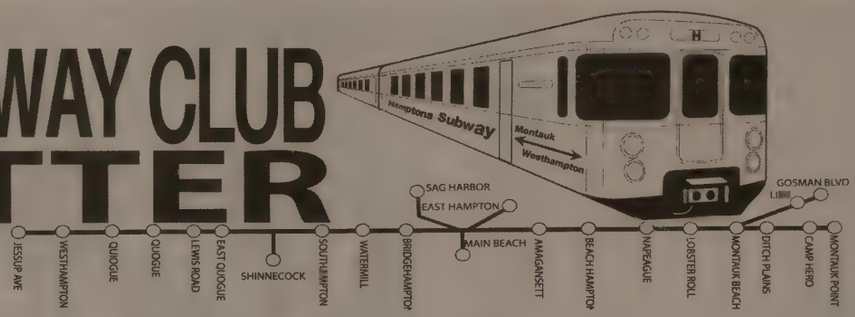
THE HAMPTON SUBWAY CLUB NEWSLETTER

Along with the New York Subway System, Hampton's Subway is the only underground transit system in the State of New York.



By Dan Rattiner

Last Thursday, some people, without authorization, entered the Hampton Subway Club Southampton Station, took the escalator down to the platform, started up the subway car that was parked there and proceeded to run it on its normal route underground throughout the Hamptons. We are told by our security people that as many as 100 people were involved in this dastardly act and that it went on for the rest of the day with people getting on and off at the various stops as if the subway were in use as an authorized transportation facility.

I want to make it clear that breaches such as this will not be tolerated. The Hampton Subway is closed for business. We, the Hussein Tel Aviv Company LLC, have purchased it and shortly will begin to convert it to its new intended use, which is as an upscale, exclusive, private underground club with a $1 million initiation fee, although I am free to tell you that the initiation fee, under certain circumstances, can be as little as $850,000. I emphasize the word "club."

Violators will be punished. Our new Security Manager, Eliot Spitzer, who was busy with other things when this breach took place, is now back and will be fully vigilant. So be warned.

On another matter, I am told that there is an effort on the part of our public officials to buy back the subway system from our club to restore it back to its former use. We here at Hussein Tel Aviv Company LLC are fully appreciative that the subway was in use for nearly 15 years, carrying folks back and forth underground to the different stations prior to our purchase. But the money offered, which is $500 million, mentioned in a bill that is being considered up in Albany, is less than half of what we want. It is true we only paid $800,000 for the old system. But in its decrepit condition, and considering all the unpaid bills that were on the books, that price was all it was worth. This will all need to be accounted for.

As for the disgraced former Commissioner of the old Hampton Subway, Bill Aspinall, he was convicted of the 172 charges involving bribery, extortion, mismanagement and simple theft two weeks ago and though we sympathize with his family, we do have to say that the death sentence handed down to him last week in State Supreme Court in Islip by Judge Irene Hardman is not nearly as much as we think he deserved.

He can console himself there on death row with the knowledge that he is the only person in America to ever be sentenced to death for a non-capital offense. At least that is something.

This breach of security was reported to the police.

Not Quite Trump

Being a Billionaire Can Sometimes be a Big Headache and a Half

By Dan Rattiner

I don't know if you have been following this story, but Donald Trump is involved in a plan to put a beautiful high-end restaurant facing the ocean at Jones Beach. It would have the Trump name on it. And if approved and built, would be just about the most expensive place to eat on Long Island. A dinner there could easily cost $300.

Trump has been out here to the Hamptons but has not been a regular. Some years ago, he tried to develop a beautiful old mansion with vast grounds in Sebonac into a private golf course with condominiums. He walked away from that plan in the end after flack from the zoning people and the general public. Today it is the exclusive Sebonack Golf Club, but there are no condominiums.

In any case, what has gone on at Jones Beach is a really good example of how things go back and forth between a builder and a community and how sometimes if you overlook something it can be a huge stumbling block.

The project, headed up by Trump and Steve Carl, who is a Long Island catering hall legend, was proposed to be built at the site of a decrepit and abandoned oceanfront restaurant at Jones Beach — which is a State Park — that had never had any success. I'm not sure of this, but I believe that restaurant was about 50,000-square-feet in size, which included a single ground floor and an 18,000-square-foot basement.

Trump and Carl proposed a 75,000-square-foot project that would include a 26,100-square-foot basement. I think Trump assumed that since there was a basement already there, he could have a basement, or even one a bit larger, even though rules passed since the old place was built that made it illegal to build a basement in a flood plain, which is where this is. Structures in illegal locations often get approved if they were there before laws are passed. They are grandfathered in.

In many ways, although debate went back and

AN UPDATE ON THE "TAHOE TO GO" STORY

By Dan Rattiner

When you last heard from me, I was getting out of my car in front of Citarella in downtown East Hampton to discover three police cars parked around my '07 Tahoe and two police officers ready to tell me they were going to impound it, which they subsequently did.

This happened on the afternoon of Saturday, April 4 at 4 p.m., a cold and windy day, and after they hauled the car away, we stood there shivering on the street corner with our shopping bags wondering how we would get home. When friends drove by, we hailed them and they stopped. So that's how we got home.

We've been renting cars since this happened. As this is written Monday, nine days later, the car remains impounded and it will probably stay that way for several more days. Albany has "straightened out" the situation. But it only updates its computers every three to five days. When that happens, the car will be released, and at what cost, I will tell you next week. (It can take up to a half hour to find somebody to talk to in Albany.)

As it turned out, the fault with this does not lie with my insurance company, me or even with the East Hampton Village Police who did what they had to do, respectfully and accurately. It was a mistake made, in my opinion, by East Hampton Village in ordering and activating something called a license plate reader.

Before they got it a short time ago, I wrote that this was going too far, that it eliminated the gray area where you could have this draconian measure because there were mitigating circumstances.

The license plate reader is a computer mounted on top of a police car to read every license plate at which it is pointed. Drive down the slow lane of a road with the reader pointed toward the parked cars, and it will pick up any forth about this project with some in favor and some opposed, there was really a kind of love affair about this project. At Jones Beach State Park there are plenty of places to get things to eat if you don't want to spend $300 for a white glove dinner. And this was an abandoned building. Trump may be a self-promoter, but he is also a billionaire and a legend. It seemed to many that such a place at this oceanfront beach and park would be a great marriage between two legends, Donald Trump and the late Robert Moses, founder of Jones Beach.

However, the State of New York, which has its zoning people up in Westchester, turned the project down. And the problem was that basement. Things may be grandfathered in. But this law was passed because of the new possibility of high seas washing up over the dunes someday. There would be people working in that basement. It would consist of a kitchen, a laundry room, a garbage room, a utility room and storage. And this law involved safety.

"You can't build a basement there, period," said one official. He might have added, "Even if you're Donald Trump," but he didn't.

Back at the drawing board, Trump and Carl concluded that they really needed that basement. They modified the plan a bit. And then they tried, and succeeded, in getting the jurisdiction for the zoning decision transferred to Long Island. (Was Westchester jealous? Was that it?)

It wasn't. The zoning people on Long Island just came to the same conclusion. No matter who you are, you could not build a basement on that spot.

Two weeks ago, Trump and Carl came back with a new plan. And it didn't have a basement. But, because there was stuff in the basement and they needed that square footage for it all, they'd have to build the square footage somewhere else. It would be up. They proposed a second floor.

Of course, with a second floor it meant that second floor would have the best view. And so they reconfigured how they would do the inside. The second floor would have the banquet hall, the ceremony room, the deck and the bridal suite, which I believe means that there would be a place for the bride and groom to have their wedding night. Hmm! As for the ground floor, it would have the restaurant and outdoor patio and kitchen and other utility areas.

Though the square footage for the new project is about 5% smaller than the earlier proposal with the basement, it does mean that what you see above ground will be taller. But looking at the plans, it does look much better proportioned as a two-story building. And two stories is only two stories after all. It rises to 43-feet-high instead of 28-feet-high.

At this point, it seems to me that what is left is a lot of posturing and politics. The zoning people will say it has to be smaller. Trump and Carl will make it smaller, but not as much smaller as the zoning people want. A lawsuit that Trump filed against the zoning people for having turned him down where there was a basement grandfathered in will probably be dropped. And we will move on.

But maybe not. Just the other day Trump and Carl filed a $500 million lawsuit against the State of New York for deception and a loss of business.

Sometimes it's tough being a billionaire. •

Propaganda, '50s Style

Historic Film Portrays Bridgehampton as a Model of Democracy

By Victoria L. Cooper

Propaganda created in Bridgehampton? A staged drowning at Sagg Main Beach? Halloween in August? Did these events happen on the East End? To find out for sure you'll have to speak to Ann Sanford, resident and local historian, who spoke this past Tuesday at the Hampton Library in Bridgehampton about "Democracy and the Cold War in Bridgehampton, 1950-1951."

Sanford, who is the author of Grandfather Lived Here: The Transformation of Bridgehampton, New York 1870-1970 is a passionate finder-of-things and while doing research on Bridgehampton in The New York Times historical archives, she uncovered a tidbit of information that would send her on a party line journey to the National Archives in Washington, D.C. The goal of her search was a film titled Problems of a Small Community. But before Sanford would ever watch the 11-minute film, she had to call local master engineers to have the original, 35mm format remastered.

Richard Wood, a photographer, architect and independent filmmaker, directed the film, which was made in August 1950. During the '50s and '60s, Wood vacationed in Bridgehampton but finally settled in East Hampton after retiring. The theme of the film centers on democracy at work — how a community comes together on issues such as ocean safety and substandard housing for the migrant potato field workers, as well as the ever present Community Council as the means to elect officials and resolve problems. The film was sponsored by the U.S. State Department, with the goal of having it shown abroad in American libraries in Italy and France to aid in our country's fight against the red blanket of communism spreading across the globe during the Cold War. Imagine Bridgehampton as an international role model for grassroots democracy —

U.S. MARINE FROM SAG DISAPPEARS, LEAVES QUESTIONS

By Tiffany Razzano

In the first weeks that a young marine from Sag Harbor and her husband were reported missing, only questions and more questions have surfaced. Twenty-year-old Lance Cpl. Margaret McMahon and her husband, fellow marine Pfc. George Kevyn Reid, have been missing from her Southern California base since March 31. Both McMahon and Reid were scheduled to deploy to Iraq this summer.

After McMahon, a native of Sag Harbor, was reported missing, police speculated that she had possibly been kidnapped by her husband, whom she met last fall and married in January. The last anyone heard from her was that she and Reid, 22, had gotten into an argument on March 30. The next morning she planned to legally change her last name at her base, Camp Pendleton, but she never made it there and has not been heard from. Reid was last seen at the Marine Corp Air Station Miramar that same morning. Both had been in the marines for only ten months and worked as communication equipment operators.

McMahon's family, friends and police feared the worst, but after she was identified on an April 1 surveillance tape withdrawing $400 from an ATM in Kansas, police have backed away from the possibility of her being kidnapped, saying that, most likely, she and her husband ran away together. Someone also attempted to withdraw money from her account at an ATM in Missouri on April 3.

Escondido police, who have reported that the couple's off-base apartment was devoid of all personal items except for their Marine uniforms and some furniture, are dropping the case because the ATM video is proof that McMahon is currently outside of their jurisdiction. and the citizens of France and Italy watching a film with exclamations of "le démocratie," "bagnino caldo," "vivre Bridgehampton!"

Sanford, who has lived through the many changes that have taken place in the past half century on the East End, was delighted to make this find. While watching the film, she recognized many of the young Bridgehamptonites who were typecast at the time. For example, one of the dramatic opening scenes shows a young man drowning in the ocean at Sagg Main Beach — a clear lesson about why communities must have lifeguards. But Sanford knows the man who "drowned" in this scene — he's alive and well, and living in Sagaponack with his family. There are other scenes in the film that feature the Main Street Barbershop with the barber pole turning, light music playing in the background and narration by a deep voiced man. Another vivid scene is shot outside the Bridgehampton Community House (the Community Council was established in 1946), where they used to hold town meetings on the steps with council members flanked by large speakers. Sanford thinks there are about 300 people in the crowd during this scene where they conduct business and elections, even showing ballots and the community supper that followed the dealings.

In her analysis of the film as a critical historian, Sanford was interested in what was real activity and what was staged propaganda. She was able to draw on some important topics, especially since, at the time, it was the height of the migrant labor crisis — potato farmers needed laborers to dig the fields yet the available housing was substandard and there was no one to take care of the fieldworkers' young children. A tragic result of this situation was the famous fire on Bridgehampton-Sag Harbor Turnpike that caused the death of two small African American children. While this was not a part of the film, it was in the context of the larger issues but the filmmakers did not fully expose the problem, instead referring to laborer's housing as "modest." Sanford noted, "It wasn't that the film said untruths about the migrant worker issue, it's just that they didn't say the truth." The following year the Bridgehampton Day Care Center was established.

Another very American, democratic lesson portrayed in the film was about the importance of good behavior on Halloween. The Community Council announced that teenagers should respect the community, and sponsored a roped-off after school party to deter pranksters from ripping off the front gates and hanging them on telephone poles. This movie was made in August, so the director and producers had to stage Halloween. There are also exciting images of the "other" Bridgehampton newspaper called Bridgehampton News that was active in the building where the Golden Pear is now located.

Clearly, the U.S. State Department commissioned this film at the height of the Cold War and it's safe to say that Bridgehampton is still very much a grassroots democratic community with very few communists to mention. This summer Sanford will publish an article about the film and her findings in The Bridge, the historical society's newsletter.

The Thomas Moran House

To The Rescue!

CPF Monies Put to Good Use, Saving the Thomas Moran House

By David Lion Rattiner

With the drama presently surrounding the Community Preservation Fund in East Hampton, it's hard not to take a closer look at a high profile preservation project right on Main Street: the Thomas Moran house. The structure, tucked away off the west side of Town Pond, was built in 1884 by the legendary painter Thomas Moran and still contains his studio. When Moran died in 1926, J. Condi and Elizabeth Boots Lamb inherited the property, and donated it to Guild Hall that same year. Registered in 1965 with the National Register of Historic Places, the property is currently not used for any purpose by Guild Hall or the public and unfortunately, there has been no historical renovation or even maintenance of the building since 1884.

A brief walk on the grounds reveals the decrepit state of the building. Sections of shingle are rotted, weather damage is present on the interior and exterior, and endless weeds and shrubs overtake the property. Last August, the New York Times published an article on what might be the fate of this historical place. Would it remain a bare boned home destined to wither away? Or would a citizen or some organization come to its rescue?

There was a lot of talk about putting the home on the market back in August, selling it to someone who would be willing to take on the financial burden of restoration. There was also talk from Peter Wolf, chairman of the Thomas Moran House Committee, about how to undertake the financial cost of restoring the house themselves and making it an additional part of the ambitious restoration of Guild Hall's John Drew Theater.

Unfortunately, none of those options moved forward. Last Friday the East Hampton Town Board held a meeting to discuss whether or not money would be contributed to restoring the home and making it a usable place for the

FROM ZERO TO 25, ELECTRIC CARS ZOOM INTO EH

By Debbie Tuma

Since East Hampton Village is one of the oldest on Long Island, and is also rated among the top most beautiful villages in America, it is no wonder that the Village Board is looking into ways to go "green" in maintaining its character and integrity.

And with the soaring costs of fuel and energy, they are also looking to save the taxpayers money.

"We are looking at possibly incorporating solar energy into three of our buildings —the Village Hall, the Emergency Services Department and the Public Works Building," said East Hampton Village Administrator Larry Cantwell. "Our Emergency Services building is 60,000-square-feet, it operates 24 hours a day with police and fire departments there, and it costs us around $80,000 a year just on electricity."

He said the Village has been working with Green Logic, a company based in Bridgehampton, to get some more affordable ideas. Cantwell said the Village also has a fleet of 55 vehicles that cost about $120,000 a year in gasoline.

"We're trying to become more fuel-efficient and more user friendly, so when we buy and replace vehicles, we are looking into more cost-efficient and greener ways to go," he said.

With gas prices above $4 per gallon in places such as Montauk, and threatening to go even higher this summer, Cantwell, Mayor Paul Rickenbach and the entire Village Board last week took a look at an electric car that uses no gas and has zero emissions.

As they waited outside their Public Works Building on Accabonac Road last Wednesday, a small, white car pulled in, with the words "All Electric Zero Emissions" printed on the side. This four-passenger car has two front bucket community.

As we wait and see the fate of the McGintee administration, pending investigations into the use of $8 million from the CPF for projects other than preservation, there is tremendous pressure on the board in terms of how these funds are used. In all fairness, this administration has made a name for itself, saving a tremendous amount of property for the Town. At the meeting, the board immediately recognized the value of the Thomas Moran house and the need to restore the property. With just one person in the room voicing opposition against the use of monies from the CPF, the board voted unanimously to put $500,000 towards the restoration of the historical home. The vote made East Hampton Village Historic Preservation Consultant Robert Hefner a very happy man.

And many residents of East Hampton share that sentiment. The home will now be protected by a historical easement, which will allow restoration of the property. This easement makes it unlawful for the Thomas Moran House to become anything else but what it originally was in the 1800s. The easement that was passed by the board requires that the studio space be restored within three years and that the outside grounds be cleaned up and maintained. The entire $500,000 easement will go towards restoration of the property.

Guild Hall raised millions of dollars to restore the John Drew Theater, bringing the arts back to East Hampton in a way that rivals the activity when the hall was built. The future restoration of the Thomas Moran House, using CPF monies, is another jewel in the crown for the Village.

seats and a seat in the back that flips up or folds down. It has a roof rack option, A/C option, and the back door opens up.

This car was brought out by Motorworks Clean Vehicles, Inc. of Amityville, a company that sells them around Long Island. Gary Birke, who owns the company, and Hugh McIvor, Marketing Director, explained to the board members that this car is considered a "utility wagon," because it only goes 25 mph, and is allowed only on street-legal NYS roads designated 35 mph or less.

"This electric car is good for local driving around the village and to the beaches," explained Birke. "We are also selling them to college campuses, including Queens College, Farmingdale University and possibly Stony Brook Southampton University, and they are also great for driving around places like hospitals and golf clubs." But unlike golf carts, the "MILES Automotive 2XS Advanced Design," as this car is called, is made with heavy steel construction, and it works on 100% electricity from plugging into a 110-volt standard outlet. This "utility wagon" sells for $19,145, which is the manufacturer's suggested retail price, including freight.

Village Board members all took turns driving the car around the huge parking lot.

"It was a quiet ride, and I love the efficiency of this car," said Village Board member David Brown. "It has its place to run people around, and I think it would fit into our fleet quite well."

Village Board member Barbara Borsack said, "I love it — I think it's a great car and I love the fact that it has no emissions, since we have enough fumes here during the summer months during highway gridlock."

Borsack added, "I've been banging the drum for our Village to go greener for a long time, and I'm glad to see we are looking into cleaner and cheaper options."

"With the price of gas today, everyone's concerned about saving money, so I think this is an excellent start," added Brown. "It's also safe, and it's good in inclement weather to drive our CEOs around."

Mayor Rickenbach took a ride in the car and said he would discuss the need for such a vehicle at future meetings with the Village. Birke explained that this is about the same price as an average car, but it has only 25% of the operating costs.

Robert Jahoda, Traffic Control Supervisor of East Hampton, was walking by and came over to take a look at the electric car. After going for a test drive he said, "It drives really smooth and perhaps this vehicle could be used to help with traffic control in the Village."

Later, Cantwell said the board would discuss whether to add this new electric car to their fleet. "This car has limited use, even for Village purposes, but I think the technology is great and the cost savings is economical," he said.

Birke said he also plans in the coming weeks to bring out an electric pickup truck that also goes the same speed and costs the same price. It seats two, and is good for light duty maintenance, hauling and landscaping. His company is also coming out later in the year with an electric car for consumers that will go up to 80 mph, and will travel up to 120 miles on a single charge.

Still shot of Harry & the Potters from the documentary We Are Wizards

We Are Wizards

Harry & the Potters, Draco & the Malfoys Live on Film

By Tiffany Razzano

Though the final installment of the epic Harry Potter series came out last summer — and was quickly digested by many zealous fans within days of its release date — the world of the boy wizard and his friends continues to live on well past the series' ending. Contributing to the ongoing Potter legacy is a documentary by Josh Koury, who was programming director for the Hamptons International Film Festival (HIFF) for five years before leaving in January 2008. He and his crew have captured the vivid world of Potter fans on film with We Are Wizards, which debuted last month at the South by Southwest Film Festival in Austin, Texas, and was featured at the New York Underground Film Festival on April 5 and April 8.

"It had been about five years since our last production," said Koury, who also founded the now defunct Brooklyn Underground Film Festival. "There were a lot of good ideas on the table, but the one we kept coming back to was Harry Potter. We were inspired to do it. There was a great world out there that needed to be uncovered. It was a pivotal time, between the sixth and seventh books. I don't think we could have come back and made [the film] later. There was an opportunity to make it and we jumped on the opportunity. That was the time and that was the inspiration."

After choosing their topic, the filmmakers were faced with the daunting task of figuring out which fans to feature in their documentary. "We didn't want to have a 90-minute roll call of fan after fan after fan gushing over Harry Potter. We wanted to tell stories that could inspire and reach people," Koury said. "Something that's important is that the film itself isn't really even about Harry Potter. It's more about people's personal stories, their struggles, inspirations and their rights to be creative and to create." Aiming to make a film that touched even those who had never picked up one of the books, he set out to find the most inspired fans, the ones who took their love of the series to the next level.

There was a lot to choose from. Eager Harry Potter fans have created a subculture that sur-

JOHN DUCK FALLS, AND RISES FROM THE ASHES

By T.J. Clemente

A 70-year-old restaurant frequented by Richard Burton and Elizabeth Taylor, where Henry Ford II, Jackie Gleason, Gary Cooper, Marlo Thomas, Alan Alda and Billy Joel had dined, is gone. On March 30, the last duck was prepared and served at John Duck Jr. in Southampton. The Westerhoff brothers, John and Mark, sold the operation to Jean Mackenzie, a local owner of both The Clamman and 4 Seasons Caterer. The sale seemed to be motivated largely by the weight of debt accrued.

While Mackenzie said the business "is not going to be John Duck," she didn't have a name in mind. She is still "fine tuning" her plan to turn the facility into a catering business for weddings, birthdays, and other large events. A proprietor in Southampton for over 30 years, Mackenzie has positioned her 25-year-old daughter, Mackenzie Koster, a Southampton High School graduate, to run the new venture. "It will be a mother-daughter business," said Mackenzie while supervising the unloading and reloading of a 4 Seasons Caterer's truck at the 15 Prospect Street location of the former John Duck Jr.

In the historic kitchen, with both the former owners and new owners, the vibe ranged from resignation on the part of the Westerhoffs to the total exuberance of Mackenzie and her daughter. John Westerhoff was in the process of finding a new place to live after spending the last 20 years living upstairs at the restaurant. He is leaving the business that was started on the North Fork by his great-grandfather and moved to Southampton by his grandfather. And he is leaving his home.

Mark seemed more resigned to the reality. The space where he prepared over 1,700 ducks a year was being turned over to local hands. He passes Trekkie and Star Wars fandom. Rather than simply obsess about the books and movies, Potter fans have enthusiastically kept the world alive through art, fan fiction and music in a way that's never been done before for any movie or fictional series. There's even an entire genre of music known as "Wizard Rock," that includes hundreds of bands from around the world that base their songs on the Harry Potter series and its characters.

Harry and the Potters, the Boston-based band that essentially founded the Wizard Rock movement, were one of the first subjects Koury latched onto. "They started off as a joke, but through the years they gained so much popularity," he said. "They spawned a whole new generation of kids who picked up instruments and new Wizard Rock bands."

We Are Wizards primarily focuses on Wizard Rock, featuring not just Harry and the Potters, but other bands integral to the movement, such as Draco and the Malfoys, The Whomping Willows, The Order of Merlin and The Hungarian Horntails. The Hungarian Horntails, two brothers aged 7 and 4 at the time the film was made, especially inspired the direction it went. To Koury, the two boys, who can barely play their instruments, embody the spirit of the Harry Potter subculture in general. "They symbolize what the Wizard Rock movement is and can be," he said. "They're not the greatest musicians in the world; let's be frank, they're little kids. But their spirit is amazing. It's not about the music, necessarily."

The film's coverage goes beyond Wizard Rock. Koury spent several long weekends filming Brad Neely, a cartoonist, who unintentionally found himself a part of the Harry Potter universe. Having never read any of the books, but a fan of the movies, Neely recorded Wizard People, Dear Reader, a hilarious, and often very adult, retelling of the movie version of the first book, Harry Potter and the Sorcerer's Stone. Originally recorded for the amusement of his friends and presented as an audio book, Wizard People is intended to be played while Sorcerer's Stone is playing on mute, much like Pink Floyd's "Dark Side of the Moon" is meant to be played to a muted Wizard of Oz.

The documentary also touches upon the issue of intellectual property rights. In 2001, Warner Bros., owner of the Harry Potter movie franchise, sued many fan sites, which were run primarily by teenagers, for violating these rights and sought to acquire these sites' domain names. They eventually dropped most of the lawsuits.

After assembling the film's cast of characters, Koury, who left the HIFF on the heels of the festival's artistic director Rajendra Roy, did nothing but eat, sleep and breathe Harry Potter, as he and his crew threw themselves into the lives of their subjects. "I've been digesting Harry Potter pretty intensely for two and a half years," he laughed, adding that though he was always a big fan of the series, he had a difficult time actually reading the last book when it came out for this reason.

When Koury showed the film to some of his former colleagues, Roy was surprised by how well he was able to relate to it. "It was interesting for me because I didn't know a lot about dragon rock or Potter culture per se, but the film was really compelling on its own as an investigative documentary," he said. "It was surprising to me that someone who wasn't a Potter fan could be entertained by it. It's the sign of a good documentary." He said the film would be of interest to anyone into alternative music and culture.

Now, the film will go on what Koury calls "a fast and furious festival run." After its showing in New York, it is headed for film festivals in Sarasota and Boston, among several others. Koury has big plans for the film. He hopes to get a distribution deal soon. If not, he plans on self-distributing the movie this summer. He's also keeping his fingers crossed for a theatrical release.

So far, Roy, who is now Chief Curator of the Department of Film at MoMA, approves of Koury's festival choices, as he's picking those with more of an edge, which are well-suited for his subject matter. But Roy also doesn't rule out the possibility of We Are Wizards coming to the HIFF. "The thing I've learned about the Hamptons is there's a very diverse audience out here," he said. "I certainly think there would be an audience for it out here just because the Hamptons audience likes a diverse range of programming."

And when asked if he'd be interested in having We Are Wizards featured at the HIFF, Koury was uncertain. "But who knows," he said. "October is a long way away."

Who's Here

Troy Roberts
News Correspondent

By Susan Galardi

"I spend so much time speaking to psychopaths and sociopaths. I've learned I have to watch myself to not get too emotionally invested. As a parent, I find it messes with your head a little bit."

After 10 years as a news correspondent for the popular CBS show "48 Hours" — the third longest running show on television — Troy Roberts has had many opportunities to hone the reporter's skill of getting a story without having the story get him. Roberts, an Emmy Award winner, has had exclusive interviews with some of the most notorious newsmakers — people who could really get under your skin — like Robert Chambers, dubbed the New York "preppy killer," and Andrew Luster, Max Factor heir and convicted felon. Although Roberts has also gotten up close and personal with luminaries from the entertainment and culture scene — like Lauren Hutton, Annie Liebowitz and Maya Angelou — much of his work has been focused on the crime scene and that's where he has had to keep on guard.

"When I didn't put up a psychological wall, it hurt me," said Roberts, recounting a challenging assignment earlier in his career. "I was in Russia doing a story on a pedophile ring and I interviewed the ring leader. I wanted to strangle him. He could tell he was getting under my skin and it ended up not being one of my better interviews. You don't want your emotions to take over — don't want it to be about your fury."

Ironically, for as long as Roberts has worked at "48 Hours" he's been coming to East Hampton. One might think it's here where he can let it all go, in the serenity of the East End. "You want to see a furious reporter?" he asked. "Put me in Hamptons traffic in August."

But this was an interview during the quietude of March, with Roberts in New York City. He had just returned from hearing Barack Obama speak at Cooper Union. And while he wasn't covering the event for the show, he felt it couldn't be missed. "I wanted to go to take a measure of the man. It was a terrific opportunity," he said. "He's undeniably impressive, charismatic. Who knows what may happen. I may be called to do coverage later."

No stranger to the political campaign trail, Roberts reported on 1996 presidential campaigns of Bill Clinton and Bob Dole as a correspondent for the "CBS Evening News with Dan Rather." As a result, he has already had firsthand exposure to the other Democratic contender, Hillary Clinton. "I have a good sense of who she is," he said.

Roberts began his career in 1985 as anchor and producer of a weekly 30-minute news magazine at a CBS station in San Francisco, then became a reporter for a Portland station. A graduate of the University of California at Berkeley with a bachelors in political science, he joined WCBS-TV in New York in 1990 as a reporter. After three years he became co-anchor of CBS's "Up to the Minute," then co-anchor of the CBS Morning News and later, a correspondent for the CBS Evening News. For the "Eye On America" series, Roberts won an Emmy for his coverage of the 1996 Olympic Summer Games in Atlanta and the infamous bombing. He provided live coverage on events ranging from the 1994 Olympic Winter Games in Lillehammer to monumental international events such as the signing of a Middle East peace agreement and the inauguration of South African President Nelson Mandela.

But it was at "48 Hours" that Roberts became involved with investigative reporting of notorious crime makers and victims: skinheads, rapists, murderers, kidnappers. Just before this interview he had completed further research on the kidnapping of Shawn Hornbeck, the 15-year-old held for four years by Michael Devlin, and Ben Ownby, the 11-year-old discovered after just four days. Roberts has been working on the story since last August, and his exclusive hour-long report on "48 Hours" will air in the fall. What interests him are the more universal issues. "This isn't just abduction," he said. "It's about rebuilding a family."

While this type of story is a departure from the more frequent murder mysteries covered on "48 Hours," there's certainly no lack of interest on the part of the viewing public for programming built around crimes and misdemeanors, whether reality based or fictitious. From the days of "Magnum, P.I." to "Hill Street Blues" to the ludicrous "Cops," shows about bad guys have lured viewers for decades. "There seems to be a hunger for criminal procedural kinds of shows," Roberts said. "I see a relationship between '48 Hours' and 'CSI' or 'Law & Order' — we're a real, live CSI."

> "There seems to be a hunger for criminal procedural kinds of shows. We're a real, live CSI."

Investigative reporting opens the door for great, albeit sometimes difficult, stories. Reporters may start with a few facts, delve deeper, make discoveries, and if they're lucky and attentive, come upon a surprise that turns the story on its head. "I did a story on a spiritual group that believed miracles can be created. It was based on teachings from The Course of Miracles, which is legit," said Roberts. "Something told me this was a cult that had bastardized the Course. Their master teacher was a classic charismatic cult leader. I learned he dictated marriages, controlled finances of his followers, isolated them from their families. We found out there took a few final glances at the kitchen his grandfather taught him to organize. The kitchen where he'd worked all of his life. In the meantime, Mackenzie Koster and her mother discussed what would go and what would stay. John Westerhoff, who has known Jean Mackenzie for more than 25 years, said, "I am happy she is buying it — keeping it local — instead of some large corporation."

15 Prospect Street had been a notorious speakeasy called Bill Thiele's Terrace Inn when Ben Westerhoff, the grandfather, purchased the business in 1946 for $5,000. During renovations many years later, filled gin bottles from that era were found buried in the walls. Signs hang on those walls today — like the Southampton Rotary Club's listing of past Presidents, from J. Corwin in 1946 to Patricia Boleny 2006. Mackenzie said all the clubs — Kiwanis, Rotary, Pedro's, Lion's — will continue to hold their meetings at 15 Prospect Street.

Jean Mackenzie and Mark Westerhoff

During the last two weeks, business at John Duck Jr. was outstanding as those who knew about the sale came by for their final chance to enjoy traditional favorites. Fathers brought sons to eat at the place where their fathers had brought them. John Westerhoff again thanked the families of Southampton that have been in through the years. He was emotional. He even mentioned the possibility of a new John Duck Jr. at another location, but admitted financing was not yet in place.

So gone forever are the days when Gloria Westerhoff, 83, the mother of John and Mark, will stand at the front door of 15 Prospect Street greeting regular customers, like 90-year-old former Southampton Town Justice Ted Sharrets. The final Roast Long Island Duckling with Apple Raisin Stuffing has been served. A tradition has died. Soon the familiar John Duck Jr. sign will be taken down forever.

But Jean Mackenzie sees it as a new beginning. She looked around and said, "This place is a gem, and I am going to polish her up." Trish Rehill, local gardening guru and friend of Mackenzie's, said this was "a great transition for both families…It's great that the place stayed in local hands."

were suicides of members — people were on the brink of madness."

Some stories Roberts reported on changed the lives of the people involved. But at least one changed the life of the reporter himself. "I was doing a story about a couple from Atlanta who adopted a 7-year-old from Russia. The child had emotional problems that required treatment, and they claimed their insurance was running out and they couldn't afford her care," he recalled. "The adoption agency wasn't forthcoming with information, and it started to look like a fraud story. The couple decided to return the girl to Russia after 5 years and we followed them. They bribed their way in to a hospital and left her there. A Russian producer got me into a locked children's ward with a hidden camera. I gave the little girl money and my phone number. It tore me up to have to leave her there. I actually thought, 'Could I adopt this child?'"

The story had a powerful ending for both the child and Roberts. After it aired, a couple in Virginia adopted the girl. Two months later she called Roberts, asking if he could visit, and while he couldn't (at the advice of the adoption agency) the idea of rescuing a forsaken child stuck with him. Reporting on an unrelated topic in South Africa, Roberts spent the day at an orphanage. "It was there that I made the decision to pursue the adoption of an older child," he said. Four months after returning from South Africa, Roberts began the adoption process. Through a family contact, he learned about a 6-year-old boy in Djibouti. Roberts traveled to the East African country four times to meet with officials and "to spend time with Jonah." Within eight months the adoption was complete. "We've been a family for three years," said Roberts.

Clearly, Roberts' invisible wall had a chink, and it wasn't the first time he let his guard down. "I did a profile on Lauren Hutton — she is the epitome of fun," he said. "We decided to go with her on spring break. Her idea of it was dog sledding in Alaska, followed by cage diving with white sharks in Central America," he said. "It was a blast."

Roberts had other assignments that were more enjoyable than trying, including a piece on photographer Annie Liebowitz and another on poet Maya Angelou. "She's not fun in the Lauren Hutton sense," he said, "but you walk away from her with a warm feeling in your heart, with ideas on how to change the world."

TWENTYSOMETHING... By David Lion Rattiner

The Stock Market

Because I studied finance in college I feel obligated to invest in the stock market with the little savings I have because according to finance people, that is what you are supposed to do. It also reminds me of college, and makes me feel like a genius when I make money. On the other hand, when I lose money, I feel like a complete idiot.

What I love about online trading is the e-mail correspondence I have with others, and the stock market being the base of our friendship. I enjoy fascinating conversations about the world because money markets and politics go hand in hand. My friend Janine's mom, who trades online, is always great to bounce ideas off of when it comes to the stock market. Then there is my high school friend Alec Overby, who is an analyst in the city. There's also my friend Jim from college, who now attends Brown, and recently just bought stock for the first time in his life.

After Visa announced the most successful IPO in human history, the e-mails started to pour in. The upside is that MasterCard went up four-fold since its IPO and the brand is now a monster with an amazing business strategy. The downside is that people who can't pay their mortgages might not be able to pay their Visa bills either. They also have a negative earnings per share. It is everywhere that you want to be, however, so we all decided to give it a thumbs up and we bought shares, a few days after the IPO of course, just to see how things would unfold.

Well, we kind of missed the boat. Visa shot up from 40 bucks a share to 60 bucks a share — the price I bought it at — within the first couple of days, and has been hovering around there since. But I still feel confident. We will just have to wait and see.

What is amazing about the stock market is that once you make a bit of money in it, all you really want to do is protect your profit, so you naturally get less risky with investments as you grow older. I think this emotional experience is exactly why older people tend to get more involved in low-risk investments.

One of the biggest issues I have with the stock market is when people ask me for a stock tip. I always give them my opinion, but in the back of my mind, I pray to God that I'm right. What's frustrating for me is that I usually am right with my advice, but I have a hard time taking my own advice and I usually miss out. When you are your own financial advisor, all you can do is argue with yourself, and that's no fun. I actually know people who hire stockbrokers because they want somebody to yell when they start to lose money. They tried the online thing, and hate being mad at themselves. We all do strange things sometimes.

It has occurred to me just now as I write that there might be some pretty serious financial people reading this. After all, this is the East End (I refuse to say the Hamptons). So feel free to send me e-mails, and we'll bond by talking about bonds, I mean stocks. You know what I mean. I could use the help.

My old buddies from college with whom I studied finance are all doing pretty well in New York City. They work as analysts or junior analysts and spend all day recommending investments based on mathematics and economic indicators. What has always bothered me about stock market mathematics is that there is always a number that you plug into the equation that is completely made up. It basically comes from a guy who says, "I think it should be this," and then it gets worked into the equation and usually that number is the number that ultimately influences the decision on whether or not you should buy or sell.

Either way, trading stocks online is one heck of a way to spend the day. Not only does it make you money sometimes, it teaches you emotional stability. I remember the first time I lost money I was ready to jump out the window.

Why? I was a sophomore in college and lost $200. Hey, that was a lot of beer way back then.

HAMPTON TRADITION XXXII — THE SEAFOOD SHOP

By T.J. Clemente

The Seafood Shop has been located at 356 Montauk Highway in Wainscott for the last 36 years. Founded in 1972 by East Hampton schoolteachers John Haessler and Bob Wilford, the Seafood Shop has always been a traditional favorite place of locals to purchase lobsters, fish, chowders and take-out.

In 1987, a year after graduating from Pierson High School in Sag Harbor, Colin Matcher started working for Haessler and Wilford at The Seafood Shop. "John was like a second father to me," recalled Matcher, who in 2000 purchased the business, although Haessler still owns the 7,500-square-foot building. Matcher likes to think of the business transaction as a father handing down the business to a son.

Besides selling fresh seafood, preparing daily soups on the premises and making lunch and dinner right in front of the customers, The Seafood Shop is famous for its customized events, such as clambakes, shore bakes, Caribbean themed events, Southwestern themed events and barbecue. The shop's mantra is "You chill, we grill."

Last March, in the midst of moving historic buildings from her Further Lane property to East Hampton Town Hall, Adelaide de Menil hired Matcher to prepare lobsters for 55 people at her home. "Where do you find corn in March for 55 people on such short notice?" Matcher asked. But he did. The next day de Menil called and said how wonderful everything tasted, and asked him to come back the next night and do it again for 77 guests.

Catering by The Seafood Shop is available from Montauk to Manhattan, or as Matcher says, "Surf to turf and everywhere in between." Along with catering upscale parties and weddings at vineyards or private homes on both the North and South Fork, The Seafood Shop is known for serving regular customers like 96-year-old Bud Levinson and Andre Elkon, who Matcher believes may have been The Seafood Shop's first customer back in 1972. Many different varieties of the fresh seafood is available at the shop, along with homemade soups that so many Hamptonites purchase on a regular basis.

Matcher prides himself on being the creator of the Polar Bear Plunge on Beach Lane in Wainscott. He said, "It's one of the first, if not the first, of its kind. We raise money for charity, but mainly Phoenix House." He also credits his staff for the continuous success with sales each year since he took over in 2000. He moved the lobster tank to create better sight lines and added an assortment of fresh and local vegetables. He explained that changes are always minor because the business is successful as it is. As a reminder, the parking lot at The Seafood Shop is covered with the clamshells the employees have shucked through the years.

The Seafood Shop is located at 356 Montauk Highway in Wainscott. Open seven days a week year-round. During the off-season the shop is open 8 a.m. to 6 p.m., and until 8 p.m. during the summer season. The takeout menu is extensive and is available at www.theseafoodshop.com. Call 631-537-0633.

The Sheltered Islander By Sally Flynn

Sheltered Islander #493

The Importance of Getting Ahead in Life

Apr 2, 2008 LONDON (Reuters) — Children playing on a Scottish beach discovered a woman's severed head in a plastic bag, police said on Tuesday.

Any Beach, Shelter Island — two single moms sitting on towels among other single moms, and kids swarming all around.

Mom 1: "My kids love the beach. They love making treasure maps and digging for treasure."

Mom 2: "I know what you mean. My kids are always making castles and digging up weird stuff. I think half of my baking tools and pans are scattered all over this beach."

Mom 1: "Mine too. Somewhere on this beach is my best spring loaded cake pan. It made the best castle foundation, you know. I lost my spring pan, but last year the kids found me a really nice blue silicone ladle with a matching baking sheet. Obviously part of a set."

Mom 2: "Somebody's missing that."

Mom 1: "I know. I always worry somebody will be over for a visit and recognize something in my kitchen that was theirs."

Mom 2: "That's every Mom on Shelter Island."

Mom 1: "Look at the kids, they're all congregating. Somebody found something."

Mom 2: "Don't get up, they'll drag it over here in a minute. Last week my kids found a conch filled with beach glass and hermit crabs. We had to take it home and put it in the sink so the hermit crabs could have water."

Mom 1: "They can't live in fresh water." Mom 2: "The kids don't know that. If I told them that, then I'd have to bring home a bucket of salt water along with everything else. The hermit crabs lived a few hours and by then the kids had lost all interest in them. I rinsed off the beach glass and shells and put them in yet another jar somewhere in the house."

Mom 1: "I think I have five jars of 'beach treasures' in my house. Off-Island people always think we're nuts. We got jars of sand with glass and parts of crabs and shells and whatever else was on the beach that day."

Mom 2: "Your kids are putting something in your car." Mom 1: "It's the big find of the day, I'm sure."

Mom 2: "Here they come. Get the sandwiches out."

Kid 1: "I saw it first. I said it's real, but Jacob thinks it's plastic. It's real isn't it Mom?"

Mom 1: "Eat your sandwich with your back to the wind, honey, so the sand doesn't blow on it. I'm sure it's real. We'll rinse it off at home and put it in the living room."

Kid 2: "It's not real. But maybe you could make a lamp with it. My aunt made a lamp with a plastic pumpkin."

Mom 2: "Okay, give me your Juicy Juice boxes. Let's keep the trash under control. You guys can have another hour, then we're going home."

Kid 1: "What if we find more of it?"

Mom 1: "Well, if it's icky, don't touch it."

Kid 1: "But if it's not icky, we can take it home too?"

Mom 1: "Yea, sure."

Mom 2: "Gotta monitor that 'ick' factor. My kids tried to bring home a dead chipmunk they found on the beach once."

Mom 1: "Eeeeew. (calls to her child) It's not a dead squirrel or something, the thing in the car?"

Kid 1: "No Ma, not a squirrel. You wanna see it?"

Mom 1: "Yea. You better bring it here."

Kid 1 brings the package.

Mom 2: "AAAAAAAAAAAAAGGGGGGHHHHHHHHHHHH!!!!!!!!!!!"

Mom 1: "Call 911! Put that down now!"

Mom 2: "Oh my gawd...is it someone we know?"

Mom 1: "Just call 911. KIDS! Get in the car, NOW!"

Kid 1: "But you said we could look for more of the lady if it wasn't too icky. You said we could stay another hour."

Dan's Book Review: Welcome to Shirley

By Victoria L. Cooper

Kelly McMasters' Welcome to Shirley: A Memoir from an Atomic Town, is a story that needs to be told. McMasters recounts her experiences growing up in the hard knock town of Shirley while weaving in the raw reality of what it means to live in the shadow of a federal nuclear laboratory that has been contaminating the town's water supply for decades.

In effect, this memoir paints a beautiful picture of Shirley, a town that from its conception was full of contradictions, its beauty being the most ironic. With a bay, rivers and a vast wild refuge, Shirley is a waterside town that was built in the 1950s by a boy from Brooklyn named Walter Turnbull Shirley (Walter T.). He also built Mastic and Mastic Beach and as McMasters says, "Locals see the three towns as a single entity and usually refer to them as Shirley and the Mastics, like a singing group. Soon after we moved to our new house, I learned that the towns are also often referred to as Drastic Mastic, Mistake Beach and Shirlée." Like most of the young men in Brooklyn at the time, Walter T. had signed up in the Great War and was put on a train and shipped out to Camp Upton (Yaphank). This is when he saw his first tree and his first glimpse of the area on the South Shore that would one day bear his name. Walter T. mimicked Levitt's (of Levittown fame) low-cost strategy of designing houses atop concrete slab foundations, sans basements, and the population grew. Yet the fatal flaw of Walter T. was that he never drew up any formal plans for the town and just started in one place and kept building — no real main street, no sewer systems — his promising campaign to offer people cheap housing using the slogans, "town of flowers" and "where the country meets the sea," was well into play.

McMasters spent her few years traveling between the "bunny hills" of the Catskill Mountains and "bunkers" of New Jersey where her father taught both golf and ski lessons. When the family finally settled into affordable Shirley, it was not long before they realized how tight this community was. All the children on the block were friends and picked which house to eat at depending on whose mother was at work or food shopping. Summers were celebrated with block parties on the Fourth of July, a tradition led by the neighborhood's favorite citizen, "glow in the dark" Jerry. He was the dad who everyone wished was their own yet his day job at the Brookhaven National Laboratory, which is owned by the Department of Energy and funded by the U.S. Department of Defense, was never spoken about. McMasters conjures up memories of Jerry coming home from work. "He would hold us back by our foreheads, shouting that he'd been 'green-slimed' — a term from a popular Nickelodeon television show at the time — at work and had to wash up." McMasters can only imagine what his work was like, cleaning up nuclear spills, burying carcasses of dead lab animals, or dumping toxic chemicals in 18-wheeler trucks and boxcars.

Throughout the years, McMasters family was accepted and adored and the neighborhood is in good morale. Yet when economic crises and other factors led to their move from the block, Jerry steps in and helps them out. And it is not long after this that doctors find tumors on Jerry's brain. This is when things in the memoir lapse to the dark side and McMasters takes a long look at the cloaked laboratory in her backyard. McMasters researches the fact that Brookhaven National Laboratory has a nuclear reactor and that much of the research focuses on arms control and weapons disposal, with a large portion of the information classified. Besides all the creepy, black hole creating monsters that Brookhaven is hiding behind steel doors and overlooking the beautiful Atlantic Ocean, it's the constant contamination of the area's water supply that turns out to be the largest revelation. Cesium 137, Europium 154, Plutonium 239, and Radium 226 don't sound yummy.

Welcome to Shirley is written with passion and humility and McMasters clear and vivid style keeps readers on edge. McMasters writes a complex tribute to a once promising summertime beach community filled with broken people defeated by the emergence of cancer clusters and regarded as damaged goods. A must read for Long Islanders.

formed security check lines out on the railroad platforms all up and down the Island. Prospective passengers were searched. And if liquor bottles were found, those having them were told they could either pour out the contents right then and there on the platform, they could hand over the liquor bottle to a policeman, receive a claim check for it and then retrieve it when they got back, or they could just give the bottle to the policeman and forfeit it. They would not be allowed to board the train with the bottle of booze.

I was intrigued to see in some of the daily papers the next day photos of young Irishmen — we are ALL Irishmen on that day — in coats, their arms outstretched, being frisked by police officers on the platforms. And it made me wonder. What became of the booze?

When it was all over, with everybody enjoying a real good time and with everything well under control as it had been for the 32 prior years before the troubles of last year, I put a call in to the East Hampton Town Police Chief, Todd Sarris.

"I keep seeing in my mind," I said, "these black and white photographs from the 1920s during prohibition of the revenue men with sledgehammers and axes smashing great piles of illegal liquor they had confiscated. Is that what was done to the booze from the parade?"

"Well, some of it got dumped out right at the platforms," he said. "But yes, we did get some bottles of liquor, and yes we did gather them up and take them down to the dump where they were smashed up."

"The police don't keep the good stuff as evidence?"

He laughed.

"No. It's not evidence. It's just what we confiscate. In years past, I recall seeing bottles of liquor we picked up at crime scenes at the police stations. They'd have tags on them. And they'd be in secured lockers. But we don't do that anymore. We just break it all up."

"A shame," I said.

So there you are. It must be a sad day in Ireland, is what it is, when they chop up the fun from the St. Pat's parade. But the smell lingers. Go down to the dump or the train platforms and take a sniff.

Here's to better days. •

will continue the investigation of her disappearance.

Still, McMahon's family says this is unlike her, as she rarely goes very long without calling. The family also reportedly said they feel they have been lied to by the Escondido Police Department and claim they have photos proving that all of McMahon's personal belongings, including her purse and ID, clothing and her phone charger, remain in her Escondido apartment — a contradiction of the police reports. They don't believe that McMahon left California willingly. The family is offering a $12,000 reward for anyone who has information that will lead to her whereabouts.

McMahon's and Reid's Myspace profiles, which have been logged onto as recently as April 7, have become de facto message boards for frustrated friends and family members. Countless comments on Reid's profile implore him to call or allow McMahon to call home as soon as possible. On her profile, she refers to herself as "Mrs. Reid." McMahon, who attended Pierson High School in Sag Harbor for three years, ultimately graduated from West Babylon High School.

Margaret McMahon

Escondido police, McMahon's mother, Kathryn McMahon, her sister, Kimberleigh McMahon, and Jeff Nichols, principal at Pierson High School, did not return calls to Dan's Papers. When her father, John McMahon, was contacted for a comment, he said, "I'm on the phone with her brother, who's in the Marine Corps, and we're trying to find his sister. I'll have to get back to you."

California into three states failed in 1998. An attempt to carve a new state out of Maryland's eastern shore of the Chesapeake also failed. The only two secessions that succeeded were Maine being carved off of Massachusetts in 1820, and West Virginia carving itself off from Virginia in 1863.

As discussions have proceeded about both of these things — most of the talk consists of distribution of taxes — it's worth noting that a lot hangs on which of these secessions gets going first.

If Peconic County gets carved out of Suffolk County first, it is going to be much harder to make Long Island its own state. The two western counties of Long Island, Nassau and Suffolk, might think alike, but Peconic County, I can tell you, has a whole different mindset. How do you create a new state if one of the three counties that were supposed to secede doesn't want to?

On the other hand, if the State of Long Island is formed before Peconic County, Peconic County might never happen at all. I think the East Enders would like the idea of us being our own state very, very much. Especially if the State Capitol could be in Riverhead. And especially if all the bridges and tunnels into Manhattan could be cut.

Finally, what are we going to do with the Windmill Antilles people? You may not know this, but still another group of patriots not long ago tried to get a whole lot of Islanders here on the East End and elsewhere to consider forming their own COUNTRY.

This country would consist of seven islands just off the northeast coast. They would all have one thing in common —they would all have old English windmills. They would include the South Fork of Long Island, Shelter Island, Plum Island, Gardiners Island, Fisher's Island, Block Island, Martha's Vineyard and Nantucket.

They too had a flag. It had a picture of all the islands on it, surrounding a central drawing of a windmill. There would be a founding mother — Aunt Tillie. And Aunt Tillie would want you to serve as a soldier in the upcoming campaign against the United States. Aunt Tillie Wants You. Aunt Tillie wants you to arm yourself with spears, shields, helmets, chain mail, and bows and arrows. And Aunt Tillie wants you to declare war and lose, so the United States would have to repay the failed island-country billions and billions of dollars in order to rebuild the economy.

These people are plotting and scheming as we speak. All for several and several for all. •

CLEAN MOUTH BETTER HEALTH - THE PERILS OF PERIODONTAL DISEASE

• Periodontal disease attacks the gums and the bone supporting the teeth in the jawbones, thereby leading to loss of teeth.
• Periodontal disease can be a chronic condition which requires ongoing care. Professional periodontal treatment is an investment in the health of your mouth and your overall well-being.
• If periodontal pockets persist, periodontal surgery may be indicated. Receding gums are another frequently overlooked problem that requires treatment; periodontal surgery can be performed to improve appearance when there is an abundance of gum tissue.
• A Surgical Microscope is utilized for cosmetic periodontal plastic surgery.

discrepancy that would come up in the paperwork of any car in that row, instantly send the information up to Albany, and instantly call for action to be taken on what is found.

I do see that this can, and does, dramatically increase the revenues for a village. (Build a statue to this man on the Town Green.) And I can see that it can result in catching all sorts of people who are flaunting the law. It also, however, can catch people caught in a paperwork foul up, as it casts its great net across the parking lots, which is what it did in this case. There is no middle ground or safety net anywhere when it comes to a license plate reader.

In this case, I was being caught because of a 14-day lapse in my insurance that occurred a year and a half ago. The lapse began on October 17, 2006, and it ended on October 31, 2006.

After looking into this, I find that on the morning of October 31, 2006, I turned in a leased '05 Land Rover 4-wheel drive to the dealer in Southampton, took the plates off it, got a lift to the Chevy dealer, Buzz Chew, less than a half mile away, and reattached the license plates to my new '07 Chevy Tahoe with 4-wheel drive. Paper work was filled out and it was done correctly. I have seen the paperwork from my insurance company. All that paperwork is in order too.

But the lapse occurred BEFORE this transfer. The new purchase ends the lapse. So during the last ten days of my owning the Land Rover, Albany suspended my registration, because of a paperwork foul up in the overlapping coverage.

"This happens all the time with Albany," my broker said. It's a big Manhattan brokerage company. "We just point it out when it is brought up and it is fixed retroactively. This is the first time it's come to a seizure in my experience."

Ah, but they don't know about the zapper on the roof. East Hampton Village is the first on Long Island to have one!

Wouldn't you think if this were the old days, maybe three months ago when they didn't have the license plate reader, the officer would have said, we are showing that your registration has been suspended for some reason. Take it home and park it and don't use it until you get it straightened out? My address was right on there. I live less than three miles away. And I suggested it.

But no. The gap between when he had learned of the suspension and the issuance of the seizure order was now zero. There is nothing I could do, the officer said. Take your things, pay your fines, figure out how to get home. Your car will be in the impound area on Accabonac Highway. You'll get your car back when it's over. And you're lucky you weren't driving when the computer found you. You'd have been arrested.

Lucky me.

The fines will be $150 in cash for the impound, $15 a day for every day it is impounded for storage, and whatever Motor Vehicle in Riverhead might decide on. They could order a continued impoundment. They can fine you $8 a day for this. Or they can forgive all or some of it.

I can also tell you that in November 2006, there was a letter from Albany telling us of the suspension. We gave the information to our Manhattan broker, and he wrote back informing us the error had been retroactively fixed. Apparently it was not.

About ten years ago, the government announced that they had the ability to put together a national database on every citizen in the country. The nation rejected it.

I saw on the CBS news on Thursday morning that there is now a device that can link your car dealer's computer and your engine. If you're late on a monthly car payment, bingo, your car gets shut down with a one-finger tap of a key. Big insurance companies are looking at purchasing these devices.

I say there are certain things that have been invented that should never be put into commercial use. The national database was one of them. The car engine turn off is another. Throw the license plate reader in the dumpster too if you can't put something into effect to deal with paperwork snafus. It's where it belongs.

And I say this from great and painful experience. •

Stealing Beauty

Learning About Art Happens Fast When You Steal It

By Cindi Cook

Stranger things have happened to Jo-Ann Corretti. Nonetheless, when she was contacted at the end of last year by Dan Perdomo, what transpired threw her for a loop.

Perdomo, who resides in Rocks Springs, Florida, had recently bought one of her paintings—one that was stolen 25 years ago—at an estate sale. Since it was signed, he knew it was Coretti's. "I was getting all these emails for orders around Christmas time, and all of a sudden this came up, with a photo of the painting in the e-mail. I was in shock, like I was seeing a ghost."

The painting, acrylic on canvas, depicts the Northport dock, where the Corettis were living at the time. After an exhibit of her work at the Crab Meadow Golf Club in Northport, this one painting was maintained, finding a spot in one of the rooms between the pro shop and the restaurant. "I came in one day and the painting was gone," tells Coretti. As anyone would be, she was quite upset, and immediately asked around to garner any information she could: nothing. She went to The Northport Observer in an attempt to publicize the story and possibly retrieve the work. After persisting for a month, Coretti gradually ceased her search and forgot about it, especially as the years passed. She didn't contact the local police out of respect for the privacy of the Club and its membership.

But after the curious, and more or less affable e-mail from Perdomo, Coretti remembered, and was understandably elated. "I called my husband and was stuttering on the phone. Who would have thought that the picture would come back to me this way?"

Jo-Ann Corretti

Perdomo had first sent an e-mail saying he had this painting and would like to have some information on it, searching on the web for Coretti and landing upon her site. "He first asked if it was mine and if I could send him a picture," she says of the initial e-mail, just an inquiry without a photo of the work. Coretti admits that she didn't really know if it was hers. "I emailed him back, just wanting to get information about which estate sale he got it from. He didn't really remember, only saying that the woman at the estate sale really didn't want to sell it, but that he eventually got her to come around. "Of course I eventually sent him a photo."

Getting in touch was also to see about any real value the painting might hold (a 24" x 36" work of Coretti's typically starts at around $3,500). Perdomo never imparted how much he paid for it; Coretti never asked. "It's got to be worth what my paintings are worth now." Perdomo had it displayed on his wall and told Coretti that his brother had looked at it one day and remarked that it was Northport, clearly the dock there. They were from Fort Salonga, a part of Northport proper, but had moved to Florida when they were children.

Coretti paints a lot of East End scenes, classifying herself as a Long Island painter. The painting meant a lot, mostly because it was 25 years ago and she's been painting for 25 years (Coretti now has many collectors and much of her work is commissioned). She and her family lived in Northport until moving to Mattituck seven years ago, where they built a house on the Mattituck Inlet. Coretti took pictures from above the dock looking down at the Coastguard ship docked there. "It was an unusual view- a great panoramic view - and I never used a perspective like that again."

Although she makes prints of all of her work, that was the only work that Coretti hadn't.

And now the painting surfaced, over two decades later. "It was kind of like a 'Twilight Zone' episode," says Coretti. "When you do a painting, you're putting your energy into the work." She felt that that energy had made its way back to her.

Friends advised Coretti to try to get the painting back, but she didn't want to. "I was happy that the painting was still around and that it wasn't destroyed - and that it was making someone happy."

OVER THE BARREL... with Lenn Thompson

It Must Be Spring

For the Long Island wine-obsessed, the start of spring is important. It means that the new vintage of light and un-oaked wines are about to be released. So keep an eye out for wines from the 2007 vintage.

For me, there is one wine in particular that always means spring is upon us — Wolffer Estate's Rosé — and winemaker Roman Roth has recently released his 2007 bottling, which retails for $15 at the winery.

Rosé comes in as many styles as there are many ways to make it. Some winemakers use the saignee method, where they bleed juice to concentrate their reds — with rosé being the byproduct. Others make rose for rose sake, even growing particular clones of merlot in a particular portion of their vineyard specifically for rosé.

Others prefer to blend juice from red grapes with that from white grapes. Roth falls into this category, making his 2007 with 40% Chardonnay, 35% Merlot, 17% Cabernet Sauvignon and 8% Cabernet Franc.

Roth, like most everyone in the local wine world, considers 2007 "an ideal growing season" because there were many warm, sunny days and only moderate rain. The fruit for this wine was harvested between September 26 and October 13. After crush, the juice gently pressed off and settled at 50° Fahrenheit followed by a cool fermentation temperature of 66° Fahrenheit to total dryness. Aged in stainless steel after blending, Malolactic fermentation was strictly avoided. Wolffer made a lot of it this year — over 4000 cases — but with another Hamptons summer, they'll need it.

A beautiful pale – extremely pale – coppery salmon color, the nose is very reminiscent of sauvignon blanc with fresh squeezed citrus aromas – grapefruit, lemon and lime – with subtle hints of herbs and briery strawberry.

On the palate, it continues its impersonation of a dry white wine with grapefruit and lemon staying in the forefront. Only as it warms do some strawberry and raspberry notes emerge. Medium-light bodied, it has great acidity and is no doubt extremely versatile. Drink it with shellfish, non-shellfish, salads, or on its own on a hot summer day at the beach. Looking for the quintessential Hamptons wine? This might be it.

Another new wine from Wolffer, the Wolffer Estate 2005 Reserve Chardonnay ($18) is a bit of a wine without an identity. If you are looking for a light, refreshing white for everyday sipping, Roth offers his La Ferme Martin Chardonnay, made mostly from steel-fermented juice. If you prefer the great chardonnays of Burgundy, do yourself a favor and try his Estate Selection Chardonnay. I'd be shocked if you don't like it.

This Reserve Chardonnay is the wine that falls in the middle, both in terms of price and style, and the style fluctuates within the stylistic continuum. This vintage shows considerable oak on the nose with toasty oak and vanilla mingling with pineapple, pear and orange aromas.

The oak is considerable on the medium-bodied palate as well, but when not over-chilled, the wine displays a mix of oak, peach, roasted apple and nuts, and apple skin, but it just doesn't quite come together for me. It's disjointed and a little awkward in its youth. For now, lay it down and see if the flavors come together better in a year or so.

Indian Island Country Club

Indian Island Golf Course
Route 105
Riverhead
631-727-0788

In the six years that Russ Moran has been the owner and executive chef here, the place has changed beyond recognition. What used to be a relatively boring place frequented only by golfers, is now a well appointed, comfortable, welcoming set of dining rooms and bar that attracts everyone who simply comes here to enjoy their lunch or dinner. It also offers much improved surroundings for golfers to celebrate the joys or, more often, drown their sorrows as they look back on the vicissitudes of their round.

There is also a new management team this year at the Golf Club and plans are well underway to continue making significant improvements to the course, practice facilities and pro shop. The natural beauty of the course with several of the holes on the front nine offering unparalleled views along the Peconic, has always been there. Head golf professional Steve Feder has already seen a marked increase in the number of golf outings booked for this year and the combination of redesigned golf course and upgraded restaurant is certain to continue to attract. Russ is also looking forward to the erection of a new semi-permanent tent adjacent to the clubhouse, which will have the ability to host catered events such as weddings, birthday parties and golf outings up to a maximum of around 160 persons. Russ also runs an off-site catering company, Catering Adventures, that is set up to provide full service catering, including chefs and servers, for events from 30 to 200.

The evening we dined here coincided with Hamptons Restaurant Week and also it was a Thursday night, which regularly is Lobster Night, so we were able to choose from an even wider range of offerings than the regular wide range of everything from sandwiches, burgers and pasta dishes to the main menu plus appetizers and entrées.

We started by sharing a large bowl of steaming hot mussels in a white wine sauce. New head chef Jose Ramirez, who previously cooked at Claudio's, showed his expertise quickly with a wonderfully understated broth that still had a good depth of taste and just enough garlic. The PEI mussels were exceptionally plump and full of that wonderful touch of sea flavor that sometimes can be swamped by a too aggressive sauce.

Next we shared a Caesar salad. Yes, the portions here are very generous to say the least, and we still were unable to finish this bowl of crisp romaine lettuce, correctly coated with that special creamy dressing that lifts the humble greens to an enjoyable level of decadence.

For our main courses, Stella was attracted by the lobster special that came perfectly cooked and is accompanied by clams, mussels and corn as well as potato. This was a real, feast as was the dish that I chose from the Restaurant Week menu. The steak Gorgonzola was an excellent piece of sirloin, cooked correctly as requested, juicy and full of taste. This was not the pallid tasteless type of steak that you sometimes come across but a high quality cut that would have graced a specialty steak house. The Gorgonzola topping added an extra piquancy to the dish.

For dessert, we reverted to a sharing policy and really enjoyed the Swiss chocolate mousse cheesecake that was light and with lots of rich chocolate filling. Together with a good cup of espresso it brought a very pleasant and enjoyable evening, made even more so by the pleasant and efficient attentiveness of Tim, our waiter, to a close.

During the course of a regular week, Russ offers several special evenings, Lobster night on Thursday is priced at a very reasonable $19.95. Early bird specials are available from 3 to 6 p.m. Monday to Friday. There is a Sunday Brunch and Prime Rib special night on Saturday for $19.95 - reservations are strongly recommended for this. The wine list is also well priced with a very good measure of wine by the glass served for around $6. The restaurant is open seven days a week now for lunch and dinner.

Russ Moran and his team deserve a lot of credit for the work they have put into this restaurant to make it somewhere you can go to eat very affordably and even more so based on our visit, enjoy unpretentious food of very high quality. They bill themselves as, 'Riverhead's best kept secret'. So it may be, but now surely is the time to change that, because it is a secret that should be shared by all.

Dan's Fashion

Dress Out Loud

Feel free to dress out loud this spring. Bright colors will dominate the season. Kick your wardrobe up a notch with pretty, feminine fashion that's fun to wear. "It's been many seasons since we've seen such a vibrant, fun color palette in fashion. We're seeing fresh, bold colors and graphic prints on everything from casual to career looks. Prints are a simple yet chic way to update your wardrobe," explains T.J. Maxx Style Expert Sonya Cosentini.

Color plays a major role in fashion this season, so it's easy to transition your wardrobe by mixing in the top spring color choices. Look for such hues as cobalt, turquoise, green, lilac, fuchsia, cherry red or lemon yellow. Black and white, and all white are trés chic, but update these looks with the pop of colorful accessories or shoes. A variety of designs include florals, bold graphics, color blocking or even madras plaid. "Pair a dramatic print top or dress with simple neutral accessories; a sense of balance is key.

The must-have, statement pieces this year include the dress, the cropped jacket, wide-leg pants and printed shorts. The dress is most definitely an office or evening wardrobe staple. This season it's versatile, colorful, easy to wear and perfect for travel. The best options include the fitted sheath, a flowing halter, swingy baby-doll, a sundress and the classic shirtdress. There's a renewed interest in the waist, both empire styles as well as belted waists are popular. In addition to beautiful colors and prints, look for interesting details such as embroidery, lace, buttons and unique sleeves.

Jackets are feminine: cropped and swing versions look refreshingly new. Try a bold graphic print or colorful plaid with shorts, capris, skirts or jeans. The blouse and skirt have made a comeback; pair together or with other separates. In tops look for linens, lace trim, smocking and waisted tunics. Shoulder and detailed sleeve shapes continue to be popular. For skirts, volume is the way to go – look for full skirts, especially pleated eyelet styles and knee-length pencil skirts. Wide-leg pants with sailor button details look fresh, especially in denim and linen, and slim shorts look great with full tops.

The handbag continues to be the "it" accessory. You should consider a large patent leather tote, metallic satchel or jeweled envelope clutch. Details such as long shoulder straps, intricate closures and bright, beautiful colors make spring/summer bags unique. Colors range from pastel florals to bright fuchsia and green as well as mustard yellow, black, white and metallic. Also, the new ombre style fades from one color into another for a gorgeous statement piece that is versatile and interesting. Shoes run the gamut from ankle-tie wedges, gladiator sandals, open-toe high heels, chunky platforms, embellished ballet flats and strap sandals. Indulge in patent, metallic, canvas, suede and leather footwear in every conceivable color and print.

Jewelry makes a beautiful statement: tri-color bangles, colorful pendants, hoop earrings, cuff bracelets and chunky beaded necklaces are the must-haves. Scarves pop with colorful retro designs.

Five spring items that you can't live or travel without:

A dress in a colorful print.

A cropped jacket in a plaid, print or floral design.

A pair of wide-leg pants; cotton, denim or light-weight linen.

A metallic or patent 'ombre' leather satchel; bigger is better.

A great pair of shoes; patent leather sandals or ankle-tie wedges.

Shopping is as easy as pie at T.J. Maxx in the Bridgehampton Commons and in Riverhead, too. The store is filled to the rafters with all new spring inventories. T.J. Maxx stores offer savings every day on brand name and designer fashions for the entire family and home. You can also find an incredible, ever-changing assortment of accessories including jewelry, ladies' shoes, handbags, belts and luggage. With new merchandise arriving every week to each store, it' a whole new store every time you shop.

When In Manhattan with Christian McLean

The Theater Itch

I must introduce you to the Flea Theater. If you've got your ear to the street, you probably already know about this haven for drama, but if not, let me tell you, it's one of the best small theaters in the city.

My introduction to the Flea was a baptism of fire: Adam Rapp's Bingo with the Indians. In their 40-seat theater, I sat in the front row, just inches from the action. It was intense. The theater space and content of the play made for a dynamic situation where I felt like I was part of the story.

Most recently, I caught Lower Ninth by Beau Willimon and it gave me the same feelings of connection and severity, but this time I was five rows back, in their 80-seat theater. When the houselights came on, I realized that it wasn't simply the intimate space of the two theaters, but the Flea's ability to get top-rate playwrights and stellar actors who are willing to experiment – who aren't okay with performing Death of a Salesman and calling it a day. That's not what this place is about. It's Off-Off Broadway in the proudest sense. Their mission statement sums it up best: "Part playground, part laboratory, and part training ground, we have been home to established artists taking new risks, emerging artists developing their ideas, and mid-career artists building sustained audiences."

Bingo with the Indians serves as a perfect example of the Flea's mission. Rapp, an award-winning writer and Pulitzer finalist, could've had his pick of Manhattan theaters to debut his newest play, but he chose the Flea. It's a safe haven for people willing to take a chance. It is also a home for top-rated actors. When The Guys had its 13-month sold-out run, it featured Tim Robbins, Sigourney Weaver and Anthony La Paglia.

A scene from Bingo with the Indians.

Twelve years ago, director Jim Simpson, designer Kyle Chepulis and playwright Mac Wellman began the Flea Theater. Now, the company rents three floors of a renovated Tribeca warehouse containing two theaters and has pulled in OBIEs and a Drama Desk Award in '04 for distinguished achievement. As an incubator for drama, the Flea plays host to the Bats, their resident repertory company. Every year over a thousand actors audition for these coveted positions. For writers, they offer the Pataphysics Playwriting Workshop. Pataphysics is a word coined by French writer Alfred Jarry in his play Guignol, which has come to be defined as "science of imaginary solutions." In these workshops esteemed playwrights lead students through writing experiments, conversations and lectures, allowing students to expand their realm of creative possibilities.

For your Hamptons connection (and there always is one) essayist, novelist, professor and playwright Roger Rosenblatt has been commissioned by the Flea to write two one-act plays, which will be performed in the autumn of '08. (A little secret: you may be able to preview them at Stony Brook Southampton this summer). Aside from supporting Hamptons writers, now is the time to get involved with the Flea. Off-Off Broadway surely doesn't rake in the bucks, so membership is important to support the Flea's endeavors. I have no personal stakes in the theater (save as an audience member) and I don't get a kickback, I just understand that creativity has to take a backseat to economics far too often. With your support the Flea can continue to take risks on talented productions – and it will get you discounts to shows and invites to special events like their limited run of Oh, the Humanity and Other Good Intentions starring Oscar-winner Marisa Tomei.

If you've been itching for some great new theater, skip Broadway and head downtown. I know Tribeca can be a hassle for those on the Upper East Side, but the trip is well worth it. If you want to make a night of it, the Tribeca Grand is just down the block.

The Flea Theater is located at 41 White Street (between Church and Broadway). For schedules and information on membership call (212) 226-2407.

Paumanok Path Part V

When you walk between the newly installed bollard (vertical post) and the repaired rail at the "elbow" in Pleasure Drive, notice the wide denuded LIPA ROW, with the huge metal towers and wires overhead to the left. The narrow spit of woods between the Paumanok Path and the ROW is filled with ATV caused scars. Recently the State DOT, and LIPA began restoring and augmenting their protective barriers in this area. They are working in cooperation with the State Central Pine Barrens Commission to help assure the success of the ATV Damage Mitigation Project. It's expected that this will push illegal ATV use out of our sensitive natural open space. I look forward to walking on these trails when they are restored, and listening to the tish-tish and buzz of inner woods birds here once again.

The first thing you notice when entering these woods is the rolling knob and kettle terrain as the trail takes you from high knobs with expansive views, to the rims of deep kettle ponds. In many places, oak worm and gypsy moth have decimated the oak, allowing pine and brush to thrive. In places, there are grass and sedge meadows. The trail from Pleasure Drive to Sears Pond is in serious need of maintenance and blazing. An Eagle Scout candidate, Forrest Gayer, will be filing a group activity permit with County Parks to lead a trained crew of scout maintainers through here soon.

Fox dens are cut into the sides of ravines caused by ATVs. The trail meanders through Maple Swamp with its diversely populated series of small ponds to the left and shallow pine needle covered kettles to the right. In close succession, you cut across several north/south running woods roads. The trail now begins to angle towards Birch Creek. Water is visible through the bare branches and a hard right turn leads south. The creek can be seen to the left.

A hiker crossing Birch Creek

When you reach Owl Pond, you will see a white and blue Paumanok Path emblem on a tree at a "T" intersection. A yellow owl blazed trail leads to the Spinney Road parking area from here. Following the white painted rectangles of the PP east, the trail travels for a short distance along a picturesque stream and swampland that feed into Birch Creek, then through some wetlands and over a brook forded by a couple of logs. Sunlight shimmers off of the evergreen leaves of the inkberry bushes.

The trail is a little muddy here for a short distance, but the sheep laurel, wintergreen, and various mosses along the trail's sides will cheer you up. The path is being encroached by brush for the next quarter mile, but it's passable. Soon the trail climbs to higher ground, where it is dry and its tread is covered by a spongy duff of pine needles. The trees here are mostly pitch pine with some oak. The trail cuts across Spinney Rd. Note the "Hiking Only" signs and the forbidding "No Unauthorized Trespass" County Parks sign. The County does allow hiking on its trails, so don't let these signs discourage you from walking them. Nearing Sears Pond, a yellow owl trail forks to the left. It heads around the north end of Sears Pond and meets back up with the PP on the other side; this trail gives some excellent views of the pond. Turn right and follow the PP around the southern portion of the pond. The trail rises up a ridge along one deep kettle hole and then ascends a steep slope with water bars down into another kettle hole that reaches below the water table. This kettle pond is known as Sears Pond. As you approach the southern tip of the pond, you can see water through the naked branches on the left side of the trail. The trail reaches another "T" intersection, this is where the PP intersects the Black Owl Loop, a trail marked with plastic diamond shaped black owls on a white background. The PP follows the lower part of this loop through Sears Bellows County Park. The upper segment of this loop runs through Hubbard Creek County Park. Here the trail is marked with black owl blazes along with the white PP rectangles. Follow a recent re-route that moved the path to higher, dryer ground. A trail spur to the left offers a better view of Sears Pond. In the next article, we continue our walk eastward to Red Creek Park; out of the Core, and onto the road.

Err, A Parent

Raising children, learning lessons By Susan M. Galardi

Transcendental Transformation

So many decisions to make as parent. Bottle feed or nurse? Family bed or separate wing? Public school in the neighborhood or prep school in another country. Every factor is heavily weighed, based on how it might affect intelligence, physical health, personality, and social skills. In other words, will it scar him for life if I let him eat in front of the television this one time while I finish writing an article?

Megatron in full lotus

For my partner and me, part of our early talks on parenting included the decision about toy guns and weapons. In her family, it was totally off limits. For mine, it was a non-issue. Pop guns, squirt guns, toy rifles and even BB guns were part of the landscape along with "Rock 'em Sock 'em Robots," "Candyland" and other board games, sports equipment, dolls, books, et cetera. My father never served in the military, two of my brothers somehow evaded the draft during Vietnam, and my eldest brother left the Marines after just a year on an honorable discharge, without seeing any "action." We just weren't the kind of family drawn to that type of civil service, but we did like playing cops and robbers and cowboys and Indians.

But growing up in the '60s, I became a folk-song singing, wavy-hair ironing, desert-boot wearing, tie-dyed in the wool pacifist. When my classmates were chanting "Gimme a C!" my high school cheer was "Hell no we won't go." So by the time I became a parent, I was totally on board with the no gun thing. Then we had a boy – no, I won't generalize – then we had our son.

All the stories were true: Sticks became swords. A remote control gadget became a laser gun. A bare paper towel roll became his "super shooter 82000." When he spied my foot-and-a-half long spiral skewers with the ornate handle, he suddenly became very interested in vegetable kebobs. In addition to loving cooking, dancing, singing, reading, story telling and dress-up, he was intrigued by guns and WMDs, sometimes choosing a toy the way I choose an entree at a restaurant. Forget about the fish – I want the capers. He didn't really care about the Peter Pan doll, but had to have the splinter-sized plastic knife.

Well, we stuck to our guns about our no-gun rule. You might say we were militant about it, but I wouldn't. Yet his interest continued, and his friends had Power Ranger, ninja, Darth Vader and every other costume with cool weapons. But with my partner standing firm, we compromised a little, letting him have swords (part of a pirate costume after all) and "action" figures. (Hmmm, "seeing action?" "Action figures?" I think I get it.) His first three "action" toys were purchased at – yes, the family friendly Disneyworld. Buzz Lightyear's laser gun. A Zurg action figure with his detachable weapon. A Pirates of the Caribbean sword that talked. Well, that opened us up to the world of Transformers: Optimus Prime. Starscream. Barricade. Decepticon Brawl. Love those names. And I actually really like the toys – it's ingenious how they're made. A puzzle in 3-D. Every little piece perfectly crafted. And Optimus Prime is a good guy – I digress. We explained that it's all for pretend. That even though Optimus Prime turns into a meteor that looks like a bomb, it's not to be thrown at people. That he can hit pillows and sofas with the swords, but never living things. That toy weapons are just that, toys. That the real things hurt people and in our family we believe that hurting and killing are always wrong.

I recently found out that Yoko Ono and John Lennon let Sean have toy guns. Yoko said boys had to work out their aggression. It gave me pause and made me feel better. Was little Sean playing with a laser shooter while John wrote "All we are saying, is give peace a chance?" Hmmm. New strategy. From now on, I'll have Joan Baez recordings on a loop in the playroom.

Entertainment In Town

review: the american dream and the sandbox...by gordin & christiano

As part of Edward Albee's ongoing 80th birthday celebration the playwright has directed two of his early one-act plays, The American Dream and The Sandbox at the venerable Cherry Lane Theatre. These satires of American values, intended as a homage to the French absurdist Eugene Ionesco, were written almost 50 years ago as an assault on middle class values, but remain startlingly fresh and even contemporary today.

As "comic nightmares" on a dysfunctional family, his third and fourth plays arrived on the scene after the explosive success of his first play, The Zoo Story, in 1958. In brief fashion (the first is a little over an hour, while the second is a mere 15 minutes) the playwright plants the seeds for many of his future characters, especially the married couple at the center of his Pulitzer Prize classic A Delicate Balance. But you see echoes of another Pulitzer Prize winner, Three Tall Women, as well as nods to Martha from Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf. This is the voice of an angry young man rebelling against the shallowness of his adoptive parents. Indeed, Albee reminded us on his 80th birthday that when he left home at 18 his adoptive mother told him "You won't make it to 20."

The living room of The American Dream, where the middle aged Mommy (Judith Ivey) and Daddy (George Bartenieff) threaten to send doddering Grandma (Lois Markle) away with "the van man" (Harmon Walsh) is allegorically wallpapered in red, white and blue. In The Sandbox, Mommy, Daddy, and Grandma sit on the beach, while a sculpted hunk (Jesse Williams), the angel of death, patiently does calisthenics as a cellist plays sad music composed specifically for the piece.

Unfortunately, Albeé had to replace one of his leading ladies, Myra Carter, who he considered to be brilliant in the role of Mommy, due to illness. Lois Markle, filling in at the last moment, felt too vital, which may be just what the playwright wanted. But quibbles aside (the performances, with the exception of the marvelous Judith Ivey, don't have the needed impact) the plays, as Albee intended them, make a potent comment on a lack of morals. Today, it simply reminds us that we're now off track by an additional 50 years.

Edward Albee has referred to his legendary body of work as "an examination of the American scene, an attack on the substitution of artificial for real values in our society, a condemnation of complacency, cruelty and emasculation and vacuity, a stand against the fiction that everything in this slipping land of our is peachy-keen."

In what must be considered the twilight of his life Albee continues his attack. Next, his play Occupant, about his artist friend the late Louise Nevelson, begins rehearsals with Mercedes Ruehl for the Signature Theatre. Then it's back to Broadway for the transfer of his new play Me, Myself and I, about identical twins, which opened to rave reviews at Princeton's McCarter Theatre in February.

No complacency here! After that, Albee is off to the Easter Island in the middle of the Pacific Ocean, where he plans to stay for three weeks to craft his latest assault, another new play, Silence, set on the idyllic spot a thousand miles away.

The American Dream and The Sandbox opened on April 1, 2008 at The Cherry Lane Theatre. Tickets are available by calling Telecharge.com at 212-239-6200.

YOUR WEEKLY GUIDE TO FUN IN THE HAMPTONS

Sharing a Canvas of Life

Two young Sag Harbor artists not only share their lives, they also share the same canvas. In an art world full of egos, these two have managed to combine their talents with their different cultural backgrounds, to create striking, overlapping forms of texture, light and color.

How two such varied artists as Yong Jo Ji, 38, of Korea, and his wife, Anna Atanasova, 26, of Bulgaria, met and fell in love, is just as much an amazing story as their sharing canvases. And for the first time, they have brought their work to the East End with their opening March 29 at Walk Tall Gallery in East Hampton.

Appropriately called "Interactions," this exhibit of over 30 soft, floaty, many-textured abstract oil paintings have an Asian quality about them. The paintings range in size and shape, and are arranged both individually and in sets, but the artists make it clear that they can be rearranged for the viewer's preference.

Wendy Wachtel, owner of the gallery, said what amazed her when she met these artists, was that, "These two talented individuals, life-partners in fact, completely allow each other entry into their respective visual worlds. They interact visually with each other on the canvas (often creating multiple canvases at a time) and deliver their conversation to us. They then further release control of their shared visual world by inviting the viewer to literally manipulate, separate, join and group any and all their canvases at will."

At the opening, Ji and Atanasova explained that they collaborate in the making of the work without premeditation or attempting to control each other.

"We synthesize intuitive ideas," said Ji. "Our conversation, our visual dialogue, is our collective energy seeking a universal language."

Ji has been exhibiting his encaustic oil paintings all over the world for the past 15 years. Atanasova, born and raised in Bulgaria, came to this country on a student visa. They both went to Chicago, where Ji had studied at the School of the Art Institute while Atanasova waitressed in a restaurant. By this time, Ji, in his mid-30s was stressed out from traveling all over the world to show his work, and he had developed a heart condition from his overly ambitious and driven lifestyle.

"I was on heart medication and my doctor was considering giving me a pacemaker," said Ji. "But then something happened which changed my life."

One night at a Chicago nightclub, he saw a beautiful young girl dancing, and he got up the nerve to talk to her. Ji invited Atanasova to an art museum and planetarium on their first date. He noticed her passion for art, and on their second date, he invited her to see his paintings, and he gave her a blank canvas, some paint and a brush.

"Although she wasn't an artist when we met, I had a sense she had talent, and I intuitively knew we were meant to do something together, so we just started painting on the same canvas," said Ji. "I showed her the technique, but she had the natural talent inside."

Atanasova said once they started collaborating, they also noticed they shared the same views about art, and the same philosophies.

"There is no Way to Peace, Peace Is the Way"

"We're both Scorpios and we're both roosters in Chinese astrology," she said. "So maybe that helps."

As they continued painting, they fell in love and got married, all during the last three years, and something else happened – Ji's heart healed.

"I no longer have a heart problem, and my inspiration was re-awakened," he said. "I never needed the pacemaker."

In addition to their incredible love story, Ji consciously reduced his stress level by moving out of Chicago to the Hamptons, two years ago.

"I decided it was time to leave the city, and I had a friend in East Quogue who invited us to stay there for a summer, in the country," he said. "We stayed for the summer, and then moved to Sag Harbor."

Wachtel said when she first met Ji and Atanasova, she not only loved their story, but knew their work and philosophy would fit into her cross-cultural gallery, which is intended to create a dialogue among international artists. "This is what excites me – I call it 'whole world' art," Wachtel said.

On April 12, Walk Tall Gallery will be holding a special benefit exhibit with additional politically charged works, to raise money for the struggle in Tibet. From April 12 through the closing of this exhibit on April 18, they will donate a portion of their sales to this Tibet cause, as seen on savetibet.org. Walk Tall Gallery is located at 62 Park Place in East Hampton, call 631-324-9776.

Leatherheads

Looking for an unusual film? You may be tempted to take a chance on Leatherheads, a story about a love triangle, the love of old-style filmmaking and also the love for football. And as long as you maintain lowered expectations, you might get through fairly satisfied.

Renée Zellweger (Down With Love, Chicago) and George Clooney (The Good German, Good Night and Good Luck) are two fine actors who have shown a knack in the past for recreating early to mid-20th century American personalities on screen, and are once again enlisted to do so. However, this time they both may have pushed their luck with this uneven attempt at throwback-inspired filmmaking.

For the second time in his career, Clooney takes on the roles of co-author, co-star and director of a movie that works to remind everyone how much better it used to be. He plays "Dodge" Connolly, an alpha-male football player on the Duluth Bulldogs . He's a dirty version of Cary Grant, with eyes for Zellweger's "Lexie" Littleton. She's a Lois Lane wannabe whose editor sends her to investigate the validity of the Bulldogs latest acquisition, Carter "The Bullet" Rutherford (John Krasinski, "The Office," License to Wed). The man is certainly a story; as both a former college star, a WWI vet and a national hero, his celebrated heroics and fame help him land a then-unheard payday of $5,000 a game.

Littleton arrives with the intent of debunking Carter's war record, which upon closer examination seems dubious. But before long, she ends up falling for her questionable, yet hunky, subject, all the while sweeping the luggish Dodge off his feet. Naturally, "Bullet" sees the moxie mama and falls in lust, which irritates Connolly to no end. He works overtime to drum up Lexie's interest with period-piece cutesy patter, regardless of the two-way relationship she's actually formed with his teammate. She denies him, yet always seems to relish his attempts. Could it be that beneath the jitterbug-style banter between Littleton and Connolly there's something real? And does Dodge dare upset the young fan favorite Rutherford who's helping put fans in the seats? And is it possible to have more characters that require "quotes" around their jazz-era nicknames? Annoyingly enough, yes... and plenty of them.

If this synopsis seems simplistic and trifling, you're on point. The actors are OK; Clooney's charm is undeniable and his direction is fine, while Krasinski plays a wooden, straight-arrow type, playing Bullet with just enough personality. Zellweger? She's game, she tries, but with all her sassy moments and hard-charging behaviors, she still comes off a little too soft to be such a tough news lady (please see Jennifer Jason Leigh in The Hudsucker Proxy to get a better idea of how this should be played), much less the center of a love triangle between two hunky jocks with very, er, masculine intentions. But the real problem here is the story itself, as it's too stocked with interrupting moments of silliness that lower the entire production. The lack of orientation between light romantic comedy and broad physical humor really ends up undermining both the love story and the honor intended for the yesteryears of American football.

The end result of all the unnecessary goofiness is a continental divide right down the middle of the picture: either you want slapstick and you're forced to wait through dialogue-driven moments, or you look forward to slick conversation and get sidetracked with comedic violence. It's such a shame, too, as every other facet of the film is done well, including some beautiful cinematography. After seeing this movie, you'll most likely think how great it would look on your HDTV, then start wishing you had seen it in your living room first before you spent two hours and $22 at the box office.

Silvia Lehrer's Cooking Column

Spinacia oleracea is the Latin name for the leafy vegetable we know as spinach. Popeye probably didn't know this name either when he made himself super strong the second he ate the vegetable. While spinach probably won't make us super strong as soon as we eat it, it's an excellent source of vitamins A and C, promoting health and vitality in many ways. Studies show that spinach may protect against osteoporosis, heart disease, colon cancer and arthritis. It also contains lutein, a carotenoid protective against eye disease.

We may have balked at eating spinach as kids but as grown-ups, we know the many delicious ways spinach can be enjoyed. For a quick side dish I will sauté crinkly spinach leaves in olive oil with slivers of garlic and a squeeze of lemon just before serving. Spinach salads became all the rage in the '70s and '80s with the beginnings of California cuisine and the focus on using fresh local produce. A recipe for spinach, raisins and pine nuts was ubiquitous, appearing in numerous cooking magazines and food articles during this period as well. It has certainly stood the test of time and continues to please. Spinaka con aroz or Spanakorizo, a spinach and rice dish familiar to both Sephardic Jews and Greek orthodox, as well as a dish I've had at home growing up, is so delicious; I worked out the details of the recipe to share with you.

Although spinach is available through the year, it peaks in April and May, and again from September through October when it is freshest, has the best flavor and is most readily available. Choose spinach that has vibrant deep green crinkly leaves with no signs of yellowing. It is important to note that spinach harbors lots of sand and grit. Be sure to wash thoroughly in several changes of tepid water. When cooking spinach for a recipe, place in a large saucepan with no water other than the water that clings to its leaves after washing and cook for just 1-2 minutes until the leaves wilt. Now you're ready to prepare the delectable dishes below.

SPANAKORIZO

Spinach and rice, Greek style

Serves 4-6

1 1/2 pounds fresh spinach
2 tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil
1 large Spanish onion, finely chopped
Coarse (kosher) salt and freshly ground pepper
1 cup cold water
1/2 teaspoon sugar
1/2 cup converted rice
Juice of 1/2 large lemon

1. Discard heavy stems from spinach and any blemished leaves. Rinse spinach thoroughly in several changes of tepid water to rid sand and grit. Lift the soaked spinach into a colander and set aside.

2. Heat oil in a large, heavy 5-6 quart pot and add the chopped onion. Saute onion, stirring occasionally until translucent, about 3-4 minutes. Add the spinach, season with salt and pepper and simmer, turning the leaves, until the spinach wilts, about 5 minutes. Add water and sugar, bring to a boil and add the rice. Submerge rice into the spinach mixture and cover pot. Simmer until rice absorbs all the liquid, about 20 minutes. Pour in lemon juice and stir to mix. Taste to adjust seasonings as necessary and serve hot.

SPINACH, RAISINS AND PINE NUTS

A recipe that has stood the test of time

Serves 4-6

2 pounds fresh, loose spinach
1/3 cup golden raisins
1/3 cup warm water
1/3 cup pine nuts
2 tablespoons light, fruity olive oil
1 large clove garlic, finely chopped
Coarse (kosher) salt and freshly ground pepper to taste

1. Discard heavy stems from spinach and any blemished leaves. Rinse spinach thoroughly in several changes of tepid water to rid of sand and grit. Place spinach in a saucepan with just the water that clings to its leaves and cook for 3 minutes, no longer. Drain in a colander and refresh under cold running water to stop the cooking. Squeeze dry in the palm of your hands. Transfer to a clean kitchen towel and squeeze the towel around the ball of spinach to absorb excess moisture. Spinach should be as dry as possible. Can be prepared ahead to this point. When ready to cook, place on a cutting board and chop coarsely.

2. Meanwhile soak raisins in warm water for about 15 minutes to "plump" them.

3. Heat oil in a skillet and sauté pine nuts over medium heat until golden, add garlic and sauté for just a few seconds longer, being careful not to brown the garlic or pine nuts. Drain raisins; add to skillet with the chopped spinach, and season with salt and pepper to taste. Toss ingredients in the pan to heat through for just a few minutes and taste to adjust seasoning if necessary. Serve hot.

ART COMMENTARY With Marion Wolberg Weiss

"Light of Spring" at Spanierman

Perhaps it's no coincidence that Spanierman's current show curated by Arlene Bujese "Light of Spring," rhymes with Stravinsky's "Rite of Spring." If we consider that "light" signifies a passage from winter to spring, it's not so difficult to imagine that Stravinsky's great composition was also a kind of physical passage - from more melodic traditions to his own expressionistic dissonance.

To say that some paintings in the show represent a "rite" for their creators does not involve a huge leap of faith either. It's simply a way of characterizing the evolution and/or change of the work. Such developments may not necessarily be recent ones, however. And the artists may disagree with the assessment.

Deborah Black's "Afternoon Field," "Bluff" and "Glade" are good examples of works where the artist has created a spontaneity and vitality that is not only different from previous pieces, but uplifting and transformative. (The fact that Ms. Black's style also seems more expressionistic than past paintings speaks to the idea suggested in Stravinsky's "Rite.")

Roy Nicholson's "Vernal Passage" series literally represents a "rite" in its title as well, although we don't want to be presumptuous and suggest what kind of passage. Is it Mr. Nicholson's change in brush strokes, color or theme? In his previous garden series of several years ago, transition between foreground / background and exterior / interior may have symbolized life and death (or a whole range of dynamics). We don't see these same oppositions at work in his current pieces. Maybe the "rite" is the pervasive, rhythmic imagery that we experience.

"Sag Main" by Robert Dash

Priscilla Bowden's local scenes signal a "rite" or change as well when considering her large landscapes or Nova Scotia settings. Her current pieces are mostly small, concentrated and concrete, literally bursting with spirit like fireworks ("Two Yellow Trees"). Her mood has evolved also, especially seen in "Sag Harbor Turnpike," where a strange magic realism prevails. It's a case of seeing a familiar place in a new "light," both literally and figuratively.

Reconfiguring a well-known area is also accomplished by Robert Dash in his "Sag Main" series. Juxtaposing primarily abstract imagery with a subtle hint of real objects evokes a chaotic sense of place, a mood that is not normally associated with this locale. Yet who better to characterize Sag Main than Mr. Dash who lives close by?

Once more, as with Ms. Bowden's "Sag Harbor Turnpike," we see Mr. Dash's turf in a new and provocative way. Perhaps it's not the artists who have undergone a "rite" of passage, but the places themselves.

"Light of Spring" will be on view at East Hampton's Spanierman Gallery until April 21.

Honoring the Artist: Doug Reina

While cover artist Doug Reina has had a diverse career, his heart and mind remain with painting. After many years as a Long Island TV reporter and scriptwriter, he's finally realized his dream and is painting full-time. Mr. Reina never forgot his roots and the time he spent at his family's second home in Montauk.

Q: Unlike most artists, your parents were both involved in art. How was that growing up?

A: My dad was a Professor of Art at Nassau Community College; my mother had a gallery in Cold Spring Harbor. I was always surrounded by artwork. My mother always told me that being an artist is difficult.

Q: Despite that advice, you studied art initially at Buffalo State College anyway and then discovered Emerson College in Boston.

A: Yes. I got a B.S. in Mass Communication, but I still felt like a fish out of water.

Q: Studying mass communication led you to become a TV news reporter, I assume.

A: Yes. This was in Huntington. Everyone treated me like family, and I thought that was nice, but I didn't want to do it forever. I then got a position at Computer Associates, doing on-camera reporting and scriptwriting. I was there for 16 years.

Q: Can you describe your process, what it means to you to paint?

A: First, I can't just sit and paint; I have to stand, even if it's for several hours. I feel like I'm involved in a boxing match, going several rounds. It's a zen thing.

Q: You mentioned you listen to books on tape when you paint.

A: Yes, if it's a good book, it gets into my painting. Years later, when I see the painting, I can remember the book I was reading. I also play "Disco Inferno" over and over again if the painting is going well.

Q: How do you feel when you look at the finished painting?

A: Sometimes I can't believe I did it. The painting creates itself; I'm the last one to get it down.

Q: You seem so connected to landscape, particularly Montauk, where you used to go all the time growing up. In fact, the cover is a scene in Montauk outside your parent's place. How do you describe what you do?

A: I paint outside, not from photographs. But I never thought of myself as a naturalist. After standing outside for a long time, I can appreciate being alone and also things like light, color, good composition, and mood.

Q: What's the bottom line as far as what a painting is to you?

A: I want viewers to imagine what's happening in the painting; it's like writing music, which uses words to tell a story.

Q: Is your son involved in art like you were when you were his age?

A: My son is very athletic like my wife (who carried a torch for one of the Olympics). But my son does art, too. He's exposed to all kinds of art. Just like I was.

Q: I understand you have several projects coming up in the future. Much luck. Oops. That's not a question.

– Marion Wolberg Weiss

Mr. Reina's work, "The Clammer," can be seen at the current Guild Hall Members Show. His work will also be on view at The Fishbar restaurant in Montauk starting mid-May.

THE Y FACTOR with Christian McLean

Alcoholic Rats Live to Drink Another Day

Researchers at Sapporo Medical University in Japan have made a huge leap forward in the cure of the often fatal disease, cirrhosis of the liver. The liver is an incredible organ that performs many crucial functions, but abuse from alcoholism or illnesses like hepatitis B and C can lead to its scarring. Strong, healthy tissue is replaced with collagen, which prevents the organ from doing its job. Today, collagen's most popular role is in the form of injections to give women bee-sting lips, but it's also created naturally in the body. The reason collagen is popular for creating big lips is because the material is firm. One of its many jobs in the body is to help give structure to tendons, muscle, skin, and cartilage. Add a little extra in your lips and you've got a set of plump, full smackers but adding extra to your liver is a whole different story.

The liver processes toxins in the body and with a normal, healthy person – even if slight damage occurs – the liver has the ability to regenerate itself. When exposed to prolonged abuse (from alcoholism or drugs) the liver's regeneration process doesn't work properly and instead of healthy new liver tissue, some cells begin to create collagen instead. The collagen creates fibrosis (hardening of the liver), which had been believed to be irreversible. As the disease persists, the liver becomes less and less able to do its many tasks and eventually a transplant may be necessary.

But transplants may be on their way out. Japanese scientists have created a procedure using a man-made molecule that blocks the production of collagen. While the tests have only been performed on rats, the results were dramatic. One of the hurdles researchers had to overcome was to convince the collagen cells to accept this molecule. Their solution was to create a Trojan horse. Other research had shown that these collagen cells absorb vitamin-A quite well, so they coated their new molecule in vitamin-A. The cells "thought" they were simply absorbing the vitamin and then the molecule went to work, dissolving and blocking the production of collagen. Once that occurred, the liver was able to regenerate itself in a healthy way, actually curing cirrhosis.

In the next few years, researchers plan to explore how human patients respond to this procedure. Until then there are several ways to keep your liver healthy. Alcoholism, drug addiction and hepatitis are the most common conditions leading to cirrhosis, so avoid them. If you do have the occasional drink, there have been studies that show that one cup of coffee a day helps prevent alcoholic cirrhosis by 20% and four cups per day by 80%. Now, all that caffeine isn't exactly great for the old ticker, so don't think you can drink a bottle of wine a night and four lattes in the morning and everything will be just fine and dandy. As for hepatitis B and C, practice safe sex, don't share needles, and don't snort cocaine – all good guidelines for living in general. There is also a vaccination for hepatitis B.

Milk thistle has been used for centuries in dealing with liver problems like jaundice. There is finally scientific evidence that supports these claims. Milk thistle contains silymarin, which seems to help stimulate antioxidant enzymes that support the liver in processing toxins in the body. Dandelion tea is also great for the gut, not to mention the kidneys and colon.

If you're afraid of taking herbs and you still want to support healthy liver function there are two veggies that will get the job done right.. Make it a goal to eat beets and artichokes and you'll be sitting pretty Until the Japanese scientists perfect their liver treatment in humans, you can keep your body's filter in good working order with these natural aids. Hopefully, by the time they make their vitamin-A coated molecules suitable for your liver, you won't need it.

Natural Hair Care Products – D.I.Y.

For many people, showering – and hair washing – is daily ritual. While it's great for the body, it's not always best for the hair. In fact, if you're not conscientious about what you put in your hair, you can actually damage it by over washing. And excessive conditioning leads to a build-up of product that just weighs down the hair and makes it heavy and oily.

Yet, understandably, few people want to give up the daily shower, especially with benefits such as exfoliating the skin, not to mention the psychological and emotional perks of a morning rinse off. So, instead of reducing the number of showers you take consider changing the products you use to give your hair and body what they need – you could even make the concoction yourself.

When you look at the back of most of the shampoos on the market, you'll find a lot of ingredients that sound unfamiliar: Sodium Lauryl Sulfate, Cocamidopropyl Betaine, Sodium Chloride, Ammonium Chloride, Tocopheryl Acetate, Biotin, Thiamin HCl, Ascorbic Acid, Panthenol, Polysorbate 20, Sodium Laureth Sulfate, Citric Acid, Tetrasodium EDTA, DMDM Hydantoin, Fragrance (Parfum), Yellow 6 (CI 15985).

Does your hair need all of this? No, it doesn't. By making your own creation, you will know exactly what you're rubbing on your scalp.

Choose the ingredients to put into your hair treatment based on the texture and color of your hair. For dry hair, oily herbs and ingredients like comfrey root, avocado, and orange blossoms add moisture and shine. For normal hair, dandelion and clover are great cleansing herbs. For oily hair, lemon grass, watercress, and strawberry leaf will clean without adding buildup. For coarse hair, try olive oil or cherry bark to smooth and calm.

Enhance your natural color by using herbs that bring out highlights. These ingredients are often mixed with alcohol and other additives in commercial shampoo. For the towheads, try lemon juice, chamomile, honey, lemon peel, or calendula. For the chocolate browns, sage, lavender, rosemary, and cloves all bring out the richest hues, and their aromas will have a soothing effect as well. Redheads can brighten up their color by adding henna, cinnamon or beets. And for the darkest ebony locks, indigo, lavender, and sage will deepen the tone.

Once you've decided which herbs are right for you, it's time to purchase the other ingredients. Liquid castile soap, spring water, herbs of your choice, and almond or apricot oil combine to make a cleansing, natural shampoo.

Find a clean glass jar with a top. Place 1/4 of the herbs of your choice into the jar. Bring the spring water to a boil, and then pour over herbs. Cover the jar and let sit for about 15 minutes. Strain the liquid into a bowl. Add liquid castile soap and almond or apricot oil and mix well. Optional: add a few drops of your favorite essential oil, like ylang ylang or lavender for a nice scent. That's it! Keep the shampoo in a bottle with a top. This recipe yields about 24 shampoos.

Even when you're using homemade recipes for shampoo and conditioner, you can get a lot of buildup in your hair. I started using an apple cider rinse a few years ago, and it adds unbelievable life and bounce to my otherwise limp hair. If you want to make your own, you'll need apple cider vinegar and lemon juice, which will restore the natural pH levels of your hair. In a jar, combine the juice from 1/2 lemon and two tablespoons of apple cider vinegar with one cup of water — that's sufficient for one rinse treatment. Add the mixture to your hair after shampooing and rinsing as usual. Do this once a week to clear the hair of buildup.

Create your own mixtures, tailored specifically to your own needs, and you'll have healthy, lustrous locks.

Earthly Delights

By April Gonzales

Looking for Flowers? Try the Trees

Flowering trees are a spring herald that last for generations. If they produce fruit, migrating birds may stop in on their way south in the fall or you may get to pick a snack in you own garden. Whether they are planted as a single specimen, an orchard or an alee, watching the blossoms drop like spring snow is entrancing.

Many people line their driveways with white flowering Bradford pears. Years ago they had problems – branches were weak, and an entire side of older trees could snap off. Hybridization over the past several decades has changed that, making these delightful trees in the landscape. "Cleveland Select" is a very slender spire-like variety that works well in narrow spaces. Elegant and similar to the round-headed Bradford pear, they're the first tree to bloom and the last to turn color and drop their leaves in the fall. These trees are not necessarily salt tolerant but they do very well in our climate. Tiny pears will occasionally develop on Bradford pears, but not enough to really make a show like ornamental apples.

Crab apple orchards have also been plagued with problems. Their early spring blossoms can drift down to the lawn and completely cover it with color. Unfortunately, some varieties have leaf fungus issues that need a regular spray program to keep them from dropping off and looking withered. Neem oil is a good treatment for this if you want to use an organic spray program, but newer varieties of crab apple can help you avoid this kind of maintenance. Malus floribunda is an older variety that has cerise buds that open to white. The trunk and branch structure is often graceful and has more character than some of the varieties that resemble lollipops. Centurion has a darker leaf, opening burgundy and fading slightly over the summer to green, and the deep pink buds open to single deep rose flowers.

Any fruiting tree will grace a sunny spring landscape. Peaches, nectarines, cherries, apples and apricots will all grow well here and bloom in a variety of pinks, peaches and whites.

You may be hard pressed to get the fruit before the birds, but there's nothing like climbing your own tree for the ripest, reddest apple on top – or the greenest. Granny Smiths are very popular as a tart apple, but the most delicious apple historically has been Cox's Orange Pippin, an old Victorian variety still occasionally available today, or try for Jonagold.

Ornamental cherries come in numerous carefree varieties that bloom in pink or white. Prunus "Yoshino" is upright with a single white flower, Prunus "Snowgoose" is a round-headed white tree. The old stand by, Prunus kwanzan, is the fabulous vase shaped double pink that can grow anywhere, even down by the ocean. Underplant with a mix of single and double white daffodils for a prolonged bloom period.

A relative of cherries, the purple leaved plum, Prunus ceracifera, has a single pink blossom. It's one of the many plum varieties that the Japanese have revered and painted for centuries. Every time you pass through Water Mill you can see one up against the brick wall of the post office. These varieties look fantastic with a backdrop of blue spruce.

Beginning to bloom at the same time as the fruit trees is Magnolia stellata, perhaps the queen of the spring flowering trees. Also known as the star magnolia, it is covered with strappy white flowers with a light fragrance. This is the earliest blooming magnolia and there are some immense specimens around. Their bark is a smooth gray like a beech but they have a more interesting and upright branching structure that makes them a better year round specimen for a sunny area.

The sugar magnolia blooms next and comes in a wide range of colors. "Jane" is a very deep rose that opens up into tulip shape. "Elizabeth" is in production now and larger specimens can be found of this unusual yellow variety. Like all the trees mentioned here, full sun is required, but these Magnolia varieties do need a little protection from late spring frosts to keep the bud tips from browning.

What to Do Right Now

Pansies, Allysum, Stocks and Dusty Miller can all go in the garden now but it is way too early for other annuals to be planted. Sow some seeds in the vegetable garden instead and get the irrigation system turned on early to keep evergreens from suffering early spring windburn.

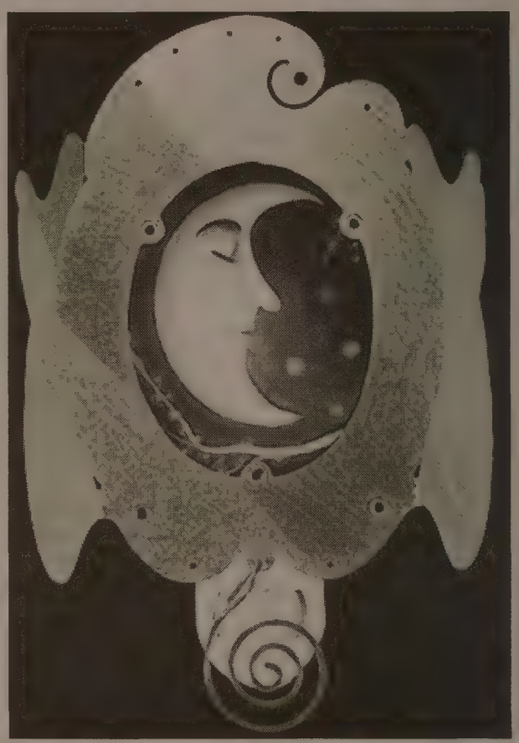
Turn on the Night

As children, nightlights kept away bad dreams, the boogieman and monsters under the bed. It didn't matter what they looked like, so long as they got the job done, keeping us safe from all that went bump in the night, until we awoke refreshed the next morning.

Now, as we grow older, nightlights have taken on a whole new role, and a whole new look. Even if you're still afraid of the dark, nightlights can be used for more practical reasons, though, ultimately, they provide a sense of comfort from the unknown, as well as a guiding light in the dark. If you're coming home late at night, or if you frequently get out of bed in the middle of the night, you might want to keep a nightlight plugged in. They're especially useful if you live with children, pets or anyone elderly.

And, as nightlights take on more adult uses, they also have become more aesthetically pleasing, taking on trendier, more decorative and more adult looks. No longer just an appliance for children's bedrooms, nightlights can reflect your personality or enhance the décor of your home.



For those who are design savvy, handcrafted, decorative nightlights would likely pique your interest. Uniquedecoronline.com and coolnightlights.com feature these creative lights, purchased directly from the artists who make them. From handmade copper nightlights to amber and aqua infused glass, these statements of artistry are beautiful when illuminated.

Go to enchantedlantern.com if you're interested in finding a nightlight that represents the lighter, carefree side of yourself. From the kitschy and the retro, to images of sports and animals, this site has a wide array of nightlights to choose from.

Personalized nightlights make a great gift, or even a great memento for your own home. At photolightframes.com you can turn your favorite memory into a nightlight by simply sliding a photo into the Photolight Frame. The frame comes in a handful of colors, including blue and pink frames, which are perfect for baby gifts.

If you are looking for something more environmentally conscious, try a multi-colored LED nightlight. These LED nightlights use only about 25 cents worth of electricity per year. Not only can you save a lot of money, but you can also help reduce greenhouse gases, as well as the need for additional power plants. So, check out environmentallights.com and don't be afraid to fill up your cart.

The Elephant Lamp at multi4m.com is environmentally conscious as well, as 5% of the proceeds of this lamp will be donated to an elephant sanctuary. Made of frosted polypropolyne, the lamp magically turns into a 3-D sculpture from a one pre-cut flap without the use of any tools or hardware. This lamp offers a soft light and can easily give off any number of colors with a different colored bulb.

So as you seek out the perfect nightlight to complement your home and guide you through the dark, remember that never before have they come in such a vast array of styles and designs.

DOG A DOZEN

Dear Dan,

I just read your article about your "Dog Named Moo." I Googled 'dog named moo' because I have one such dog...and I found your article, which, I must say is quite funny.

My Moo (a bichon) is rather smart, however I have a poodle-bichon mix that is not so smart. I was laughing out loud at your story, because between my two dogs, I could appreciate every word of your story-envisioning the expressions, etc. My not-so-smart dog, Zeke, just stares at me, panting all the time with this confused look. So I had to email you and say thanks for a good chuckle.

WHERE ART THOU FARMER'S BAR?

Dear Dan,

Dear David,

This is probably not the right department to ask this question, but I will anyway. The Farmer's Bar Restaurant, which was located in Cutchogue, closed. Does anyone know if they will reopen elsewhere?

We loved the food and the atmosphere there. We didn't frequent it every week or month, but it was a top pick on AOL's restaurant list. That is how I found it.

Farmer's Bar please come back.

Thank you,
Bonnie Zabell

PECONIC MAN

Dear Dan,

"Another Reason Why We Need Peconic County Now" (Dan Rattiner – March 28) made sense. Residents of Peconic County clearly send more tax dollars to Suffolk County then they receive in essential services. They have far more in common with upstate New York and New England residents than those of western Suffolk County. In the past decades, development of western Suffolk County has resulted in extending suburban sprawl from Nassau County farther east into Suffolk County.

Residents of Staten Island feel the same way about their inequitable financial relationship with City Hall in Manhattan. Nassau and Suffolk County feel the same way about their relationship to Albany and Washington. Ditto for New York City citizens in their relationship with Albany and Washington.

A ballot proposition for self-determination is the only fair way to resolve the issue to establish Peconic County. Sadly, residents of Peconic County are bound to suffer the same fate as those of Staten Island, New York City and most recently Nassau and Suffolk Counties who have also desired change.

At the end of the day, Republican New York State majority leader Joseph Bruno and Democratic State Assembly Speaker Sheldon Silver would have to allow companion bills out of their respective legislative committees to the floor for a full vote by each side of the house for such legislation to pass. Don't hold your breath waiting for such action to take place.

Self-determination is a basic right going back to the Revolutionary War, when colonialists fought for their independence from England. Will the New York State legislative delegation from Peconic County be able to persuade Bruno and Silver to allow a vote for self-determination? Time will tell.

Sincerely,
Larry Penner

NO RINGS AT THE BEACH

Dear Dan,

Attention: David Lion Gardiner

Re: Twentysomething, Issue March 21, 2008

The story "Losing A Wedding Ring," recalled an almost disaster of my own. It was summer in the 1980s; I was hurrying to clean up so the family could go to the Maidstone Beach. The kids were antsy and all I heard was "Hurry up mom – come on!" It was our garbage pick-up day and I rushed through the house getting all the wastebaskets, old papers including Dan's Papers (sorry!) and misc. kitchen debris thrown in the outside pail scheduled for pick-up within the half hour.

I dashed to the car filled with impatient kids and made the drive to Maidstone in abut five minutes, As we settled ourselves on the sand, I remembered taking off my diamond engagement and wedding rings and cleaning them at home. I had heard that beach sand would loosen the setting, so you should take off your rings before going to the beach, so I did. I also remembered with a panic that the rings were drying on a paper towel next to the sink. Did I pick up that towel and throw them in the garbage? Not sure, I left everyone at the beach, dashed back to the house and ran into the kitchen. I HAD thrown the paper towel out! I ran to the garbage pail. Lucky for me the pick up was late. Tearing through the papers and "stuff" was a paper towel squeezed together with my rings inside.

My smile could have made a rainbow in the sky. I'll never forget that moment.

Thanks for your story – it brought back quite a memory!

WESTERN DUEL

Dear Dan,

Just wanted to drop a note. Dan Rattiner and most "Peconic County" dwellers need to get off their high horse. I just read an article in which Dan Rattiner speaks of us "westerners" as if we are inner-city hoodlums and dirt bags.

Apologies. They are fine, fine people. – DR

LAUGH IT UP

Dear Dan,

You are the best! I love Dan's Papers. It has all the news of the Hamptons plus events of interest to all.

But most of all, Dan, you make me laugh. I bet William Allen White didn't make his readers laugh.

Keep up the great witty writing Dan.

Sincerely,
Margaret Wurtz

He was a serious fellow, an inspiration, a mention and something else, but I forget. – DR

Police Blotter

Fiat

If you haven't heard the Jerry Seinfeld crashed his car in East Hampton by flipping his Fiat into a controlled roll after his brakes failed, then you're an idiot.

What?

A boy in East Hampton reported to police that somebody stole his blue bicycle that was missing a handle grip and also had a rusty chain. Police suspect that it was the same guy that stole all of the used food containers from a Westhampton Beach Chinese food restaurant.

Just Won't Deal With It

A man in Sag Harbor was arrested by police after he was pulled over numerous times for driving his car without a registration. The man was arrested and his license has been suspended. His excuse for not taking care of his registration has something to do with either playing too many video games or a general hatred for public rules.

Graffiti

Police found graffiti on some of the public signs in Bridgehampton last week. They believe it was the Bridgehampton gangsters who were responsible and these rough and tough dudes wrote some of their gang slogans such as the, "Scarsdale Roughriders" and "The Ross School Artsters." Police are concerned that the recent tagging could spring a gang war between the Ross School Artster gang and the Southampton Cashmere Thugs, which might cause an alliance between the Mercedes Kids and the Westchester Winchesters, which would be really bad.

Dozen Eggs

A guy in Montauk reported to police that a dozen eggs were thrown at his car. Police double checked their calendars and have confirmed that it is no longer Halloween. Who the hell throws a dozen eggs this time of year? Crazy people, that's who.

Cell Phoner

A man in Southampton was pulled over by police for talking on his cell phone. Of course, like always, the man explained to the officer who he was talking to and why it was so important. The important conversation this time around? His dry cleaner hadn't cleaned his jacket to his liking. Jerk.

It's Getting Crazy

A business owner in Hampton Bays reported to police that somebody stole $4,000 worth of gasoline from his trucks by siphoning the gas out of them. People it's getting to that point, will somebody discover moon oil or make a car that runs on cow farts or something? For crying out loud!

The Drinker

A man was pulled over in Southampton for driving erratically. When the officer pulled the man over, he noticed that he smelled an odd amount of minty fresh breath. The man failed the sobriety tests. Apparently the man tried to cover his drunkenness by drinking half a bottle of mouthwash. Little did he know that mouthwash contains about fifty percent alcohol.
